Fares going up on all ferries to Island

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It's going to cost more to get off Vancouver Island by sea this year no matter which route you choose.

The Victoria-Seattle ferry will be more expensive when the service starts up in mid-May, Ald. Bob Wright said Tuesday.

And tourists will also have to pay more on Washington State ferries, which operates the Anacortes-Sidney ferry service.

It announced a general 25 per cent increase on all routes today.

Black Ball Transport Inc., which runs the Coho to Port Angeles year-round, said today it is also planning a rate hike to take effect in May, but it probably won't be as high as Washington state ferries' increase.

And the B.C. Ferry Corp. has asked the provincial cabinet to approve a rate increase of $2 or $3 for vehicles. And there are strong indications a hike will be approved.

Rising fuel and labor costs are the main reasons officials give for the increased fares.

Last season it cost $13 one-way and $21 return for foot passengers on the Princess Marguerite.

Wright didn't say what the new fare structure will be.

"A small fare increase is quite likely," is all he will say.

The Anacortes-Sidney run now costs $16.95 for a car and driver one-way and $3.95 for passengers.

The new rates haven't been worked out yet but a 25 per cent hike will bring those figures to around $20.20 and $5.

The Coho now charges $16.25 Canadian for a car and driver travelling one-way across Juan de Fuca Strait, and $4.65 for a passenger.

The local manager said the percentage increase is still being determined, but it probably will be less than the state ferries' 25 per cent.

Wright, a newly-appointed director of the B.C. Steamship Co. which operates the service, also confirmed that the replacement vessel for the Marguerite will not carry vehicles.

Thus the modifications to the Queen of Prince Rupert will cost $550,000 less than the $1.5 million original estimate.

The first plan had Burrard-Yarrows cutting a hole in her side to accommodate cars, as the dock in Seattle takes only side-loading vessels.

Wright also said the Rupert will make only one trip a day until June, when two round trips will probably have to be offered to meet the demand.

The Boeing hydrofoil planned to augment the Rupert should be in service by May 1, two weeks before the Rupert is due to start.

By the end of June, Wright said there should be two daily sailings by the 800-passenger Rupert and three round trips on the 250-passenger hydrofoil.

No fares have been set for the hydrofoil, which will make the trip in half the usual four hours it took the Marguerite, but Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele says it will probably be around $20 to $25 one way.

MD's goof then years of misery

By PAT DUFOUR

A Times story and picture last week on a Seattle woman who walked around for five years with a large surgical clamp in her abdomen made Stephen Woloshyn sit up and take notice.

Woloshyn, of 220 Kamloops, was interested because for 30 years he went through agony with an undetected surgical blade inside his nose.

Woloshyn's told the Times his problems began when he was serving with the Royal Canadian Artillery during the Second World War.

Suffering from sinusitis, he was admitted to the military hospital — now Camosun College — and had surgery.

The major who performed the operation is still practising as an eye, throat and ear specialist, according to Woloshyn.

But Woloshyn says the cost of a civil suit is beyond his means.

He has been unable to get copies of the x-rays for his personal evidence.

Woloshyn says it wasn't long after the initial operation before he began to have fresh problems with his nose and he says he spent a fortune on medications that did no good.

"Then I had a terrible attack in the spring of 1976. I was seeing my doctor and I was on medication but not progressing at all," he says.

His doctor ordered x-rays and it was then the surgical blade was spotted.

Some of the metal had corroded, adding the danger of poison.

The infection had also spread to one eye and an ear.

The blade was finally removed by surgery in July, 1976.

"My recovery was very bad. I wasn't doing too well at all," Woloshyn says.

He had more surgery in September of that year.

"It was months before I really recovered from that."

Woloshyn says he is still under treatment and now receives a small disability pension from the department of veterans' affairs.

But the pension, he claims, is completely inadequate for the pain and financial burden he has had and still suffers.

He said he appeared before a review board in December and his pension was increased slightly.

Woloshun isn't giving up though and hopes to win yet another increase.

"I have one more step to go and that's the final review board."

Mortgage aid: Ottawa plays it very cool

Times News Services

Skyrocketing interest rates are obviously creating great problems for homeowners but an aid program may be too expensive now, says Finance Minister Allan MacEachen.

The extent to which oil revenues flow to Ottawa will determine whether homeowners will get any relief, MacEachen said.

MacEachen said at a news conference following a 75-minute meeting with Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller and Ontario Housing Minister Claude Bennett that he "would not hook it directly to the Alberta-Canada negotiations," but the revenues would have to come from somewhere.

"You know the size of the deficit and that hasn't gone away."

The federal deficit reached $11 billion last year.

"Any possible program will have to be judged in relation to its cost but as of the moment, we haven't reached any decisions."

MacEachen said his officials are closely monitoring interest rates.

"No, I haven't reached the conclusion that something must be done," said MacEachen when asked if he had to take action to aid homeowners. "I have to know what that something is and what it will cost before I regard it as inevitable."

Miller said he urged MacEachen to consider aid for homeowners to allow them to keep their homes. But, he said, the federal finance minister was a "real pro" by not giving him any assurance that federal help was imminent.

Bennett warned that if the federal and provincial governments do not help mortgage holders, the costs will eventually come back in terms of subsidies for those who must rent accommodation.

"If we don't move on (interest rate) subsidies, then we will see those people who had to give up their homes back in the rental markets," he said. "If that happens, we'll have to pay anyway."

In Ottawa, the Consumers Association of Canada warned Tuesday that high interest rates have placed both those wanting to buy houses and those renegotiating mortgages in an "intolerable" situation.

The organization, in a letter to MacEachen, said that the Bank of Canada's new policy of letting inter-

Sorters sort of upset

Those loud wails are from the guys who sort the mail.

In this case, the mail sorters of the Glanford mail processing plant.

Their mid-month overtime cheques which should have been delivered Mar. 15, are either lost or delayed somewhere in the mail.

And the sorters are sort of upset.

So upset that the word this morning was that they were considering walking off the job.

Plant manager Duncan Brooks said if the sorters walk off, finding the cheques might be a bit of a problem.

Brooks said: "We haven't really lost the mail."

He said the cheques weren't printed until last Friday and he doesn't know what day they were put in the mail.

But Peter DeBelle, vice-president of the Victoria local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, said he's heard the overtime work sheet was lost in a move between two offices in Ottawa and didn't turn up until last Wednesday.

Vancouver has worst problem

VANCOUVER (CP) — Greater Vancouver has the most serious housing shortage problem in North America, says a study released Tuesday by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

And Victoria and Vancouver ranked first and second in Canada for the lowest vacancy rate.

The study was conducted by the corporation's B.C. regional office in co-operation with the U.S. department of housing and urban development.

And a survey by the Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver shows housing prices in Greater Vancouver on average jumped a full seven per cent in the first eight weeks of 1980.

The corporation also said that:

—B.C. housing starts set a record in February — 2,137 units — with the most coming in multiple units;

—Increases in new house prices in Vancouver in 1979 were the highest in Canada.

The study on housing shortages looked at all cities with more than one million residents. Vancouver beat other tight markets such as Miami and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Denver, Colo., and Dallas, Tex.

The corporation cited several reasons for the results.

Included are a rapid rise in both new and existing house prices; rental buildings being rented prior to completion; near zero apartment vacancies; more new single-detached housing being absorbed by the market and near low levels of inventories of all types of housing, with only 130 units in the multiple category available in Greater Vancouver at the beginning of February.

The report notes that few parcels of land are available for development within easy commuting distance to downtown.

National parks hike camp fees

OTTAWA (CP) — It will cost campers at least 33 per cent more to pitch a tent in any of Canada's 28 national parks this summer.

Parks Canada announced Tuesday it will increase camping and recreational fees April 1, the first such increase since 1975.

The fee hikes are necessary to keep pace with higher operating costs and to bring rates for national parks in line with those charged in private parks, a spokesman explained.

Daily camping fees will jump to $4.50 from $3 in a campground with standard services, to $7 from $5 for a campsite equipped with individual electricity outlets and to $8 from $6 for a site with individual electricity, sewer and water outlets. A $3 fee is also being introduced for unserviced camping areas.

Fees for use of facilities such as golf courses, tennis courts and boat dockings will also go up.

Motor vehicle entrance fees, introduced in 1975, will remain at $10 for an annual permit valid for all parks, $2 for a four-day permit and $1 for one day.

Vogel denies charges

Deputy Attorney-General Dick Vogel today denied he has ever interfered with the justice process and said he is suing the CBC and reporter Chris Bird for libel.

In his first statement since he took a leave of absence from his post, Vogel said: "I categorically and vehemently deny the allegations made about me in the CBC program.

"At no time have I improperly performed my duties nor have I been influenced by improper motives.

"In three cases, the CBC accused me of influencing the course of justice to help friends and associates. This is not true. Any actions I took were in the course of discharging my public duties and acting in the interest of the community as a whole," Vogel said.

Vogel asked for and was granted a leave of absence while Attorney-General Allan Williams completes an investigation into the CBC program's claims.

Hydro bills to bear transit tax

By PAT DUFOUR

It's official — starting April 1, Capital Regional District taxpayers will pay an extra $1 per household on their Hydro bills to cover a predicted public transit deficit of $2.2 million.

And in spite of angry opposition, Salt Spring Islanders will have to cough up the cash, too — at least for the first year the CRD runs the buses.

Ken Arnott, chairman of Salt Spring Island's transport committee, and fellow islander Dr. Leonard Kreissl, a member of the Islands Trust, appeared before the CRD's transit planning committee today to ask that Salt Spring Island be excluded from the transit area.

But they were told by regional board chairman Jim Campbell that agreements have been signed that include Salt Spring Island.

Campbell advised them to wait until they can assess if better transit service is forthcoming.

He said when he comes to Victoria, he has to leave Saturna Island by 6:40 a.m. and it takes until 11 a.m. for him to reach downtown Victoria if he goes by bus.

Committee chairman Norma Sealey told Arnott and Kreissl that the service being planned for the future will provide buses to Swartz Bay every 60 minutes with a 30-minute service during peak periods.

CRD directors were delighted with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm's statement Tuesday that cabinet had given its approval to the CRD proposal for a Hydro surcharge.

"We really have no alternative but to accept their proposal," Vander Zalm admitted.

"There's no time left, nor can they agree on any other approach."

Vander Zalm said the government had accepted the CRD proposal and will simply negotiate the details.

The minister said his colleagues was not 100 per cent happy with the Hydro surcharge.

"But I guess they reason that with the reduction in the sales tax (on Hydro bills) they can fairly impose this charge because it won't make much difference to the property owners."

In other business, the committee was told by Larry Miller, assistant general manager of the Urban Transit Authority (UTA) that the human resources ministry has agreed to purchase passes for senior citizens who now receive special $5 bus passes.

Miller said the ministry has agreed to pay $50 a year for each pass to the UTA, providing an estimated $250,000 for its transit budget.

Miller said the ministry had agreed that restrictions on pass use during off-peak hours and restriction to single zone would be acceptable.

The ministry will be the authority to decide how much the bus passes will cost in future.

Rest home owners fuming over fire check tactics

The Victoria fire department has launched an intensive inspection program at city nursing homes and private care facilities to check for fire hazards and building code violations.

First on the list was Grant Place at 988 Humboldt, a converted mansion, which firemen visited on Tuesday.

And the owners — Lawrence Hitchmough, and his wife — are upset over the way it was handled.

They said they object strongly to the manner in which the inspection was carried out at the home, where there are 30 elderly residents.

"We weren't informed. We weren't told anything," Hitchmough said.

He said he's willing to make any improvements asked for by the department, as the home has always passed inspection in the past.

But the announcement to the press without any notification to the owners was "underhanded," he said.

"It was like you had a bouncing cheque and they put it on television," he said.

There are some 20 homes to be checked in the first phase of the department's inspection plan, Fire Chief Eric Simmons said today.

Grant Place appeared on CHEK television news Tuesday night as the first one to be inspected and the disclosure came as a shock to some residents and relatives.

Several residents asked if they would have to move, Hitchmough said, and there are rumors — untrue — spreading fast that the home will have to close.

The firemen wouldn't say whether Grant Place had passed or failed, he added, just that it was premature to make any statements.

In the last two years the Victoria fire department has concentrated on bringing apartment buildings and hotels up to the latest building code standards.

With that task largely completed, it is moving on to rest homes.

All types of facilities, including government-operated homes, are included, Simmons said.

Fire inspectors are using the upgrading provisions of city bylaw 3434 which allows the department to order improvements to be made.

It is different from the usual regular inspections carried out in the past.

Now, owners are being told to bring their facilities up to the standards in the recently-amended national building code, including smoke and heat sensors, fire separation barriers, between floors, wider corridors and better emergency lighting and fire escapes.

Some apartments and hotels have had to undertake expensive alteration programs.

Owners have the right to appeal the fire department's order to the city's fire prevention services committee, and ultimtely to city council.

"Listening to what my inspectors say, some of them (nursing homes) will require some changes," Simmons said.

A spokesman for the B.C. Association of Private Care Facilities, which has 23 members in Victoria, said fire is the main concern of owners and operators.

"I think it's the number one concern in our homes," said Edna Galbraith, secretary-manager of the association.

"Firemen are constantly in our places," she said.

Road theft suspects in custody

RCMP have two suspects in custody after a 29-year-old Courtenay man was robbed of his wallet and rented truck by two hitchhikers on the Malahat Tuesday.

A Shawnigan Lake RCMP spokesman said Stephen Frederick Allen picked up the men at Silver Bridge at Duncan and was driving into Victoria when the pair pulled a knife, turned-off the ignition and ordered him to get out.

Allen flagged down a passing car and phoned police.

Shortly before 6 p.m. police received a tip two men matching the suspects' description had boarded the B.C. Ferries' Queen of Vancouver at Swartz Bay.

The sailing was delayed about 10 minutes while four members of the RCMP detachment in Sidney located one suspect.

The other hid but was caught by Delta police at Tsawwassen.

Help on mortgages tied to oil revenues

est rates float "does not disguise" the hardship for Canadians trying to own houses.

The bank's interest rate, which influences all other interest rates, rose last week from 14 to a record 14.19 percent. The chartered banks followed with a 0.75 per cent increase in rates to their best customers.

Meanwhile, Fred McNeil, chairman of the Bank of Montreal, said in Calgary that Canadian interests rates will soon be forced into line with those in the United States.

"The short-term outlook is not good at all," he told a meeting of the Calgary Society of Financial Analysts, adding that the influx of U.S. dollars into Canadian energy stocks "appears to be easing."

Major banks in the United States now are charging 19-per-cent prime lending rates, compared to the 15-per-cent level in Canada.

And another round of mortgage rate increases appeared to be starting with an announcement from the Royal Bank that one-year and three-year open mortgages are going up by by one-half of one per cent, bringing the new rates to 15½ and 15¾ per cent respectively, effective today.

On three-year and five-year regular mortgages, the rates will move up by three-quarters of one per cent to 15¼ for both, the bank announced.

Lalonde against tankers

VANCOUVER (CP) — Federal Energy Minister Marc Lalonde said today he will push for an overland route to move Alaskan oil to the midwestern United States when he meets with American officials in Washington next week.

After a meeting here with his British Columbia counterpart, Bob McClelland, Lalonde said the new Liberal government is opposed to increased oil tanker traffic along the B.C. coast.

However, Lalonde said he doubted any action would be taken by the U.S. on an oil pipeline route before the American elections in November.

On another matter, Lalonde said B.C.'s fears of a federal tax on natural gas exports are not justified at the present time because the matter has not even been considered by Ottawa. However, he would not rule out such a tax as part of an over-all energy package in the future.

The federal minister has been meeting with his provincial counterparts in the West to begin discussions on an energy agreement. But Lalonde and McClelland said they did not reach any early agreement during their discussions today.

Lalonde earlier Tuesday visited Edmonton and Regina for energy talks with his provincial counterparys in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Wright planning to subdivide

Ald. Bob Wright of Victoria said today he plans to subdivide his Tsehum Harbor property and sell individual lots.

But Wright, who's wrangled with North Saanich council for more than two years over development plans for the land, said he's still willing to meet with council if alderman want to reconsider his earlier proposal. Under this plan he offered part of the property to the municipality in exchange for the right to expand the existing marina.

Under North Saanich's community plan, the property can be subdivided into half-acre lots, with community water, or one-acre lots without community water.

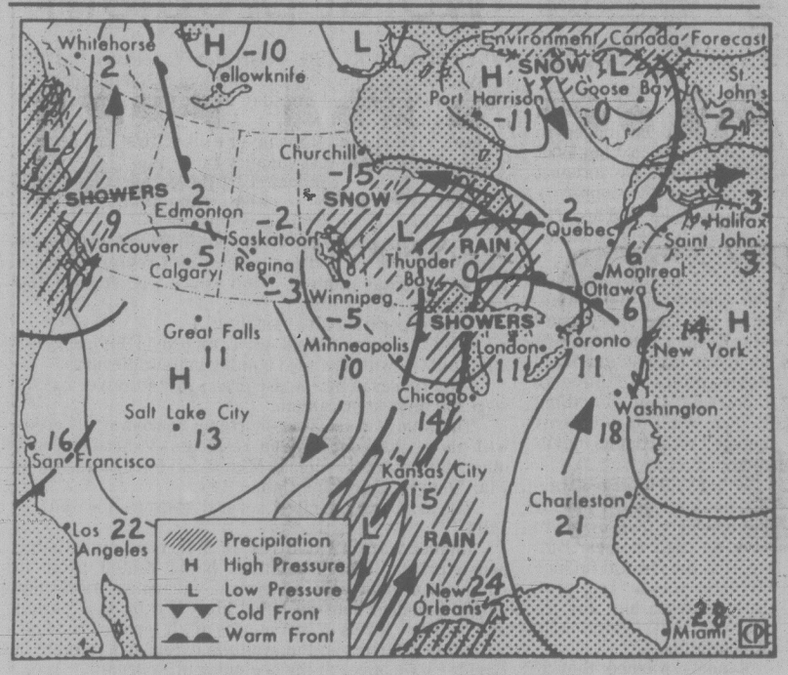

Wright said his engineers are drawing up plans on that basis.

"I'm sad about this," he said. "I really think the proposal made before would have been the best for the community, the immediate neighbors, the birds and the trees but it was rejected out of hand by former mayor George Westwood."

Wright describes the property as some of the finest waterfront land available anywhere in the Victoria area. He expects high quality development there.

Earlier this week North Saanich council learned that in spite of its objections, about 25 acres of the 45-acre site Wright owns has been taken out of the Agricultural Land Reserve.

END OF THE ROAD: This blazing Van was a write-off before firemen could reach it after it caught fire on a downtown Vancouver street. No one was injured and investigators were unable to say what caused the blaze.

Accounting study begins

The provincial finance ministry has begun a detailed review of its own accounting procedures.

Finance Minister Hugh Curtis ordered the detailed study after Auditor-General Erma Morrison complained of sloppy government bookkeeping for the second year in a row.

"I want any weaknesses in the system corrected, without excuses," Curtis said Tuesday.

"I want no unnecessary delays, no excuses from department heads and no failure to provide all the facts, with recommendations as to how to meet the auditor-general's complaints."

The minister gave the job to his deputy, Larry Bell, and to provincial Comptroller-General Lionel Bonnell.

"I have not set a deadline for the completion of their report because I don't think a firm deadline can be realistically set."

Morrison's annual report, tabled in the legislature last week, said little progress has been made to correct the abuses in government accounting practices which she had outlined in her first report a year ago.

Vogel case review continues

Attorney-General Allan Williams said Tuesday he has not yet completed an investigation into CBC reports that deputy attorney-general Dick Vogel used his position to influence three criminal cases.

Williams said he is not aware of any letter, clearing Vogel, which may have been sent to him by the Vancouver lawyer he hired to assist him with his review.

"I don't know whether Mr. (John) Hall has sent me a letter," Williams said.

The attorney-general said he will not make any statements "until my review is complete — certainly there is no suggestion of clearing or not clearing anybody."

Tardy Socreds saved

The Socred government defeated a surprise motion of non-confidence Tuesday night — but not without a few nervous moments.

NDP leader Dave Barrett introduced the motion last week over the Social Credit government's $5.8 billion budget.

Immediately after the dinner break Tuesday, the NDP MLAs suddenly adjourned debate on the motion and called for a vote.

At the time, there were 25 government members in their seats facing 25 NDP members, but five minutes later, when division bells stopped ringing, four more government members had been hurried from lingering over their deserts to defeat the motion 29 to 25.

Social Credit holds 31 of the 57 seats in the legislature, the NDP the balance.

NDP spokesmen said the quick call was to remind the government to be on its toes.

Ryan draws B.C. support

The Socred government supports some of Claude Ryan's proposed constitutional reforms for Canada, Intergovernmental Relations Minister Garde Gardom said Tuesday.

Gardom, in his first formal response to the Quebec Liberal leader's study paper on consitutional change, said he agrees with the proposed changes to the central institutions of the Canadian federation and a proposal to change the division of powers.

"If you take them collectively, they would in our view result in a more flexible federalism," Gardom said.

He said that, while there are differences in numbers, names and degrees of power, the B.C. proposal has a lot of similarities to the Ryan proposal and the Pepin-Robarts report on Canadian unity. He declined, however, to be specific.

"I look upon Mr. Ryan's proposal's as being clear and concise and comprehensive," he said.

The constitution has to altered and he expects significant moves to be made in that direction after the Quebec referendum.

"The constitution today is not effectively doing the job for Canada. It's been demonstrated in the political process."

Wage-price controls seen

Canadians should be prepared for reintroduction of wage and price controls in the next few years, Stu Leggatt (NDP — Coquitlam-Moody) said Tuesday.

Controls are inevitable, he said, because of the present trend in Western economies.

"I base that on the general inflation rate in the U.S. and the failure of the U.S. economy to come to grips with that rate," he told the B.C. legislature. "We're looking at 17 per cent in terms of inflation this year in the U.S."

Manipulation of the interest rate or controls on the money supply won't dampen the fire of inflation sufficiently, he said.

"I'm not welcoming controls, but I'm warning this (Social Credit) government that I believe they've got to seriously examine the kind of controls we have next time.

"I believe in selective price controls; a control program which picks out those prices which are clearly unfair and unjust to average and low-income people."

Leggatt said he is convinced controls will work better this time, if governments take time to study the mistakes of the federal government's previous attempt to institute a wage and price control program.

He also called for reinstatement of the Housing Corp. of B.C., whose assets were sold off in 1977 to various private interests.

The corporation, set up by the NDP, carried out many successful programs and if kept would have provided a number of housing starts for younger people, he said.

Leaky hunt over, reporters working

Reporters in the legislative press gallery have given up looking for radiation leaks and have gone back to looking for leaks from politicians.

Gallery members were assured Tuesday by Dr. Wayne Greene, director of the provincial radiation protection service, that video display terminals in the gallery are not capable of producing dangerous radio-frequency radiation.

The machines were checked last week for possible x-ray radiation but none was found. Reporters were concerned that there had been no testing for radio-frequency radiation.

Greene explained that VDTs cannot produce such radiation of sufficient intensity to constitute a risk. They have a wide margin of safety, he said.

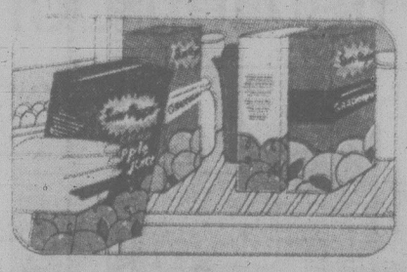

He also stated metal radiation shields, which are to be installed on certain units, are useless because there is nothing to shield against.

Gallery members last week called for complete testing of their VDTs. They were expected to vote later today to [illegible]'s assurances and withdraw any threat of switching off the VDT equipment.

Too high a price

By tomorrow noon, reports from Ottawa will begin filtering to the west coast detailing the outcome of the bidding between the chartered banks for Canadian government treasury bills. The Bank of Canada will then set the new prime interest rate at one-quarter of one per cent above the winning bid. The new rate will last until next Thursday, when the spot price for money will be reset.

As a result of this week-old floating prime rate policy, interest charges on consumer loans and mortgages have jumped to 16 per cent and above. The best that can be hoped for tomorrow is that rates will remain stable, but many analysts believe they have not peaked and will continue to follow the trend in the U.S. where borrowers are facing 19 per cent rates.

Hard hit by this upward spiral of interest rates are homeowners, especially those in lower income brackets. Their mortgages are generally renewed every three or five years. That means that at renewal time the homeowner must pay current interest rates for the next three or five years. For those renewing a five-year mortgage this year, the interest rate could jump by as much as 50 per cent and the actual monthly payment could jump by as much as 35 per cent.

For instance, a $40,000, 25-year mortgage taken out in 1975 would have cost $364 a month in interest and principal at a rate of 10¼ per cent . If that mortgage was renewed at today's interest rate of 15¼ per cent, the monthly payment would be $490 in interest and principal payments on the remaining principal of about $37,-000.

A similiar $60,000 mortgage taken out in 1975, one that was costing $546 a month, would be renewed today at $735 a month. In both cases the increase is about 30 per cent.

Evidence that higher interest rates are putting homes beyond the financial reach of the people who live in them is beginning to surface in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation statistics. The federal agency provides insurance to leading institutions in case mortgage holders default on their home-purchase loans. In 1979 CMHC paid $499 million on 7,700 insurance claims. In 1978, only $188 million was paid out in insurance claims.

People are losing their homes. And in place like southwestern B.C. where rental vacancy rates are near zero, people have real problems just finding a place to live.

There is apparently no relief in sight. John Dowell of CMHC says the default rate will continue to rise as interest rates climb. "We're anticipating a lot more people getting into trouble."

Two hundred thousand Canadians will make trips to their banks this year to renew their mortgages. Many received federal homeownership assistance loans to purchase their first house. Their monthly payments under renegotiated interest rates will double.

Tightening the money supply and allowing interest rates to rise has been the United States and Canadian government's main anti-inflation weapon. The theory is that borrowing and spending will be discouraged, prices will come down and labor will moderate wage demands, thus quelling inflation.

However, if people's homes are to be the battleground in the fight against inflation, it will be a very unfair and costly war politically.

A lesson in Catch-22

Once upon a time teachers considered their occupation to be a profession. Students came first, salaries second. No doubt as a result, teachers were often underpaid.

That was a long time ago, but some teachers now have a peculiar perspective of their own needs versus the needs of students entrusted to the school's educational care.

The latest example comes from Ontario where the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation is proposing a remarkable Catch-22 for high school students unlucky enough to be caught in a bargaining dispute.

The scenario goes like this:

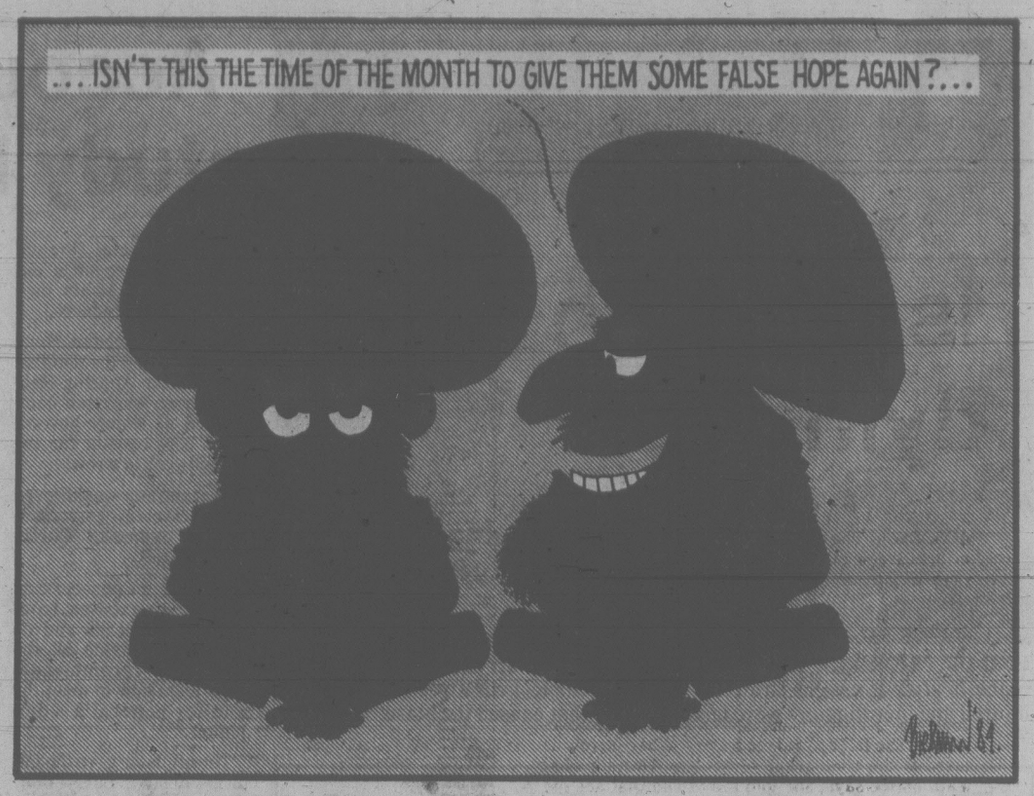

Negotiations fail, teachers go on strike (which is permitted under Ontario law).

Students stay away from school because there are no classes.

Students then fail because they have been absent for too many days during the year — counting, of course, all those days of strike time.

This creates a situation in which innocent parties are prevented from going about their business because of a strike, and then are punished by the strikers for not going about their business.

Such cynical and punitive tactics will only result in the Ontario government taking away the teachers' right to strike.

Uranium mining

Would Premier Bill Bennett kindly inform us, as citizens of B.C., of his reasons for halting the Bates Commission of Inquiry into Uranium Mining in B.C.

He may argue that it was because he had decided, for whatever reasons, that a seven-year moratorium should be placed on uranium mining and exploration and that, he decided to conclude it as (as he put it in his statement) "after a thorough examination of the (Bates) Commission Interim Report and weighing the subsequent public reaction to that report . . . as well as the impact of the further work carried out by the Commission."

It is this last statement that B.C. citizens need to have clarified. Specifically, what was going to be the "impact" of the further work?

Would the impact have included questions of rehabilitation of areas that have been disturbed (and radiation let loose) by exploration?

Would it have included questions regarding mixed exploration and mining such as the molybdenum/uranium mine in Atlin? Is this molybdenum mine (because of the uranium content) subject to the moratorium?

Would it have included questions of scientific evidence which supports a great deal of the opposition to uranum activity rather than the reverse?

Would it have included the hearings (which he has now silenced) on environmental impact, public and worker health, social impact, jurisdiction, regulation, enforcement and ethical questions?

Bennett's equivocation on the "impact of further work" of the Commission has left an air of uncertainty. We need to be reassured by the completion of the task of the Bates Inquiry.

It is not too late to revive the commission and I would urge the government to do so. — David Weston, 1562 Sherwood, Nanaimo.

Too much power

Claude Ryan may well be the next Premier of Quebec. If he has his way on constitutional matters he will also be a dominant force in Ottawa. This is spelled out in the Quebec Liberal Party's recent white paper, "A New Canadian Federation".

In Mr. Ryan's blueprint for Canada the Premier of Quebec would also be the leader of a Quebec block in a new "federal council". Replacing the Senate, it would have the power to veto laws and delay other measures passed by our elected House of Commons.

Quebec would have the biggest voice in Mr. Ryan's new council. It would have 25 per cent of the votes on some issues and 50 per cent on others. As a two-thirds majority is needed to validate international treaties and approve arrangements between Ottawa and the provinces, Premier Ryan's influence at the national level would be impressive indeed.

Imagine an upper house made up of 10 provincial teams each headed by a provincial premier. Some blocks would be bigger than others and Quebec, ganging up with one or more of the small provinces, could insist on settlements in areas of federal jurisdiction as the price Ottawa has to pay for its co-operation in federal-provincial affairs.

Mr. Ryan's new Federal Council has been described as a "House of Obstruction". It could hamstring parliament where emergency measures or tax increases were concerned.

The Premier of Quebec, dictating how the Quebec block voted, could have a major say in this new national forum.

If I had to choose between Claude Ryan's frustrating federalism and Rene Levesque's separatism, I would opt for the latter. We Westerners could live with a separate Quebec. What we can't and won't abide is Quebec politicians running our national affairs for us! — Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

I noted a letter (In defence) in your column of March 7 under the signature of Garth Griffiths of Tsawwassen, in which he suggests that jobs on Hydro projects "should go to those who can do them" even if that means importing foreign labor. Mr. Griffiths also suggests that in Hydro's case "the books are open.".

With respect to the "open books" on the Cheekye-Dunsmuir power line project which will cost the people of this Province $1 billion without producing a single kilowatt hour of new energy, I would challenge Mr. Griffiths to obtain the final route studies for the project which states the employment impacts in Phase II, Appendix 3. I am aware that numbered copies of the study do exist within B.C. Hydro, but they have yet to be released even though the government has now made a final decision on route selection for the power line. Also, I have asked B.C. Hydro for a copy of its contract with Standard Telefon og Kabelfabrik and Industrie Pirelli Spa in order to ascertain whether or not B.C. construction and electrical workers will be employed in the project. I was refused a copy of the contract.

With respect to Mr. Griffiths' comment that Hydro jobs "go to those who can do them", it should be noted that IBEW crews from this province have provided the bulk of the labor force for the submarine cables currently in use between the mainland and Vancouver Island. It appears that on the Cheekye-Dunsmuir project it is Hydro's intention to ignore local companies and labor, and to create employment overseas.

The fact is that the government has made its decision to spend approximately $1 billion on the Cheekye-Dunsmuir with an inadequate cost-benefit analysis, in contradiction to its own linear development guidelines, in the face of strong opposition both within and outside of B.C. Hydro, without promised public hearings, and furthermore, without proper concern for energy and employment needs on Vancouver Island and in B.C.

If Mr. Griffiths cares to contact me I will provide him with the employment impact information from Hyrdo's confidential final route selection report on the Cheekye-Dunsmuir project. — Robert E. Skelly, MLA, Alberni.

Already gone

Colombia: can it retain its democracy?

When people in this country think of Colombia, some associate it with excellent coffee, others with no more than its quality marijuana or cocaine. But, the recent takeover of the Dominican Republic Embassy by members of the M-19 movement with the U.S. ambassador among the hostages has focused attention on Colombia's growing internal discontent.

Some North Americans have expressed surprise at the turmoil. Isn't Colombia one of the few remaining democracies in Latin America? The answer is an increasingly qualified yes, and there is concern, perhaps premature, that in the present fluid situation, Colombia might follow the path toward repressive military rule so familiar to students of Latin American politics.

Certainly the mass military trials of alleged guerrillas now under way in Colombia raise fears of a government disproportionately controlled by the military. These fears are not allayed by reports that President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala would call for speedier trials of those accused in hopes that acquittals of some of the defendants might appease the M-19 guerrillas.

Better than many

Colombia's recent record of elections and respect for political liberties contrasts favorably with that of many of its neighbors in the Southern Hemisphere. The country has so far avoided repressive military rule, or human-rights violations on the scale of Brazil in the 1960s, or of Argentina, Chile and Uruguay in the 1970s. Indeed, the fact that Colombia's precarious, limited democracy has lasted as long as it has is in itself an impressive achievement.

But Colombian democracy is constricted within a contrived and narrowing political context and with economic growth that has continued to exclude large sectors of the population from its benefit. Colombian democracy's longevity is due in large part to the special roles that the two traditional parties, the Conservative and the Liberal, have played throughout the country's history, and to the shrewd ability and dedication of the country's political leaders.

Since the 19th century, these two parties have dominated Colombian politics, at times locked in bitter struggle against each other in a series of civil wars, at other times sharing power. The most recent interparty conflict, in the late 1940s and early 1950s, were also the bloodiest, causing an estimated 200,000 deaths. Known simply as La Violencia, it eventually precipitated the military intevention of Gen. Gustavo Rojas Pinilla in 1953.

An ingenious interparty accord, the National Front Agreement, overwhelmingly approved by a nationwide plebiscite in 1957, established democratic rule. From 1958 to 1974, the presidency alternated between members of the two parties, and during that period, there was bipartisan parity in the cabinet and other executive and judicial posts. Seats in the legislature were also divided equally between the two parties and proportionally within each of them to the different factions, based on electoral results.

Colombia enjoyed significant economic growth during the 1960s and '70s, but the two-party coalition stymied reform. Agrarian reform legislation did not generate significant redistribution of land and rural poverty remained widespread. Moreover, rapid population growth and massive urbanization led to cities with overburdened services, inadequate housing and high rates of underemployment and unemployment. In 1974, 3.6 percent of the population controlled 27.2 percent of the nation's total income, and 45 percent of all households had annual per capita incomes below $150.

Thus, although the National Front successfully dealt with the issue of traditional party violence, it left unsolved a long list of serious social and economic problems. It also saddled the country with continued coalition government, in part because both parties continued to rely for electoral purposes on machine-style favors provided by public resources even as party differences blurred and party allegiances slowly declined.

In 1970, rising social discontent, particularly in the urban areas, was channeled into a vote for Rojas, who, running as a Conservative, headed a heterogeneous, populist movement. The official National Front candidate, who faced two other opponents as well as Rojas, won by the slimmest of margins, and many in the country are still convinced that the election was fraudulent. To the dismay of some supporters, including future members of the M-19 movement, Rojas passively accepted the result. In 1974, Rojas' party came in a distant third in national level competitive elections; after that, it continued to decline, due to internal divisions and to massive defections back to the traditional parties. During this period, the M-19 movement, named after the date of the 1970 elections many believed were fraudulent, first struck publicly by taking Simon Bolivar's sword, a national treasure, from its museum display case.

Economic growth and prosperity has excluded many Colombians.

The late 1970s were marked by increasing social and political disorder. Inflation, which averaged 12 percent in the 1960s, was over 20 percent in the 1970s. The illegal drug trade, conservatively estimated by one source in 1978 as worth $650 million to Colombia, spawned increased lawlessness and corruption. Real estate and financial speculations made overnight millionaires and further concentrated wealth, while real wages for workers declined and labor protests intensified.

The left-wing opposition, however, remains fragmented and isolated from large sectors of the population. It lacks both charismatic leadership and the strategic advantage of a single, highy visible villain. It is further hampered by very restricted media access. The combined vote of all opposition movements in the previous three elections has only averaged eight percent. Last week's election was not expected to be much better. Yet, many of the kidnappings and bank robberies have taken on more political overtones, as small rural guerrilla movements continue to be active.

In 1976, the head of a centrist labor federation was kidnapped by the M-19 and subsequently killed. In some cases, business leaders have been kidnapped and held until their companies reached satisfactory labor contracts with their workers.

Pressures have grown from within business groups and the military for government crackdowns. Soon after liberal President Turbay was inaugurated in 1978, he enacted with bipartisan support, a tough Statute on Security, using powers bestowed upon him by the state of siege. The state of siege has been in partial or total effect for more than three-quarters of the time since 1958. Under Turbay's statute its repressive function became more apparent.

The new statute increased the types of crimes to be tried in courts martial, substantially increased the powers of arrest of the armed forces, lengthened sentences for such crimes as kidnapping and extortion, and prohibited news reports on public disturbances while they were occurring.

Soon after the statute's enactment, several dozen students arrested by the military alleged that they had been tortured during interrogation. Then, in January 1979, the M-19, in a daring raid, tunneled 250 feet into an army arsenal in Bogota and stole more than 4,000 weapons. Following that incident, thousands of people with leftist sympathies were taken for questioning and allegations of torture and mysterious deaths, some well documented, became more common. The release of those defendants now on trial is demanded unconditionally by the M-19. The military did recover the stolen arms, and apparently broke up a large number of urban guerrilla cells.

Muddling through

Because of the increased use of the military to control the civil services, some observers fear the "Uruguayization" of Colombia — a gradual takeover of the entire government by the armed forces rather than by a coup d'etat. Given the opposition's current weakness, a leftist revolutionary takeover in the near future is almost inconceivable; Colombia lacks either the massive polarization or the structured violence currently witnessed, for example, in Central America. But reactive repression is a real threat. If the activities of the leftist guerilla groups such as the M-19 strengthen the authority of conservative elements within government, generate official repression and produce rightist paramilitary groups, an increasing spiral of violent reaction and counterreaction may lead to military domination.

More likely in the short run, though, is continued two-party coalition rule. In the past, Colombia's political leaders have shown an uncanny ability to muddle through serious crises. Eventually, however, if democracy is to survive, mechanisms incorporating the new politically alienated who have begun to transcend traditional party divisions, and the economically excluded must be [illegible]. Without them, Colombia has no chance to survive as a democracy and the turmoil which thrust it suddenly into the world press is very likely to continue.

Russians ask:

Is it worth dying for?

By DAN FISHER

MOSCOW — The photograph of the young Russian soldier is in a new black mourning frame. His mother has a certificate saying he died a hero, defending his homeland.

Death in war is no stranger in this country. It is hard to find a Soviet family that was not touched by the slaughter of the Second World War, and even today there is pride in those 20 million war dead.

However, a close friend of the grieving Russian mother said she felt no pride to help ease her sorrow as she gazed at the photograph of her son. Despite what the death notice says, she told the friend that she did not think Afghanistan was worth dying for.

The reaction is that of only one woman. It may or may not be an indication of things to come as the Soviet involvement in Afghanistan continues. Even if others here come to think the same way, the political and cultural realities of Soviet life guarantee that there will be no mass domestic outcry against the Kremlin's move into Afghanistan, certainly nothing like the one in the United States about the action in Vietnam.

But the case of the Russian mother does show that even in this closed society a few people, if only through tragedy, are being forced to deal emotionally with the reality of Afghanistan.

Until recently, most Soviet citizens seemed to view Afghanistan primarily as the rather unlikely spark that touched off the latest in a long string of political crises between the superpowers. It didn't really appear to touch them any more than talk of the energy crisis seemed to touch Americans until there were queues at filling stations.

Moscow did not admit publicly that there were any Soviet troops in Afghanistan until three days after the Kremlin-engineered coup of December 27.

So far, there has not been the slightest hint in the press here that Russians have been involved in any fighting, and the last official word, quoting the Afghan authorities, was that there has not been a single Soviet casualty there.

Now, however, the first sealed metal coffins from Afghanistan are arriving in the capital, bringing the grimmer realities of the Soviet occupation into the homes of the Russian mother and an unknown number of others like her. With the coffins has come a steady flow of rumors and second or third-hand reports, some of them based on Western radio broadcasts, which have disturbed many other citizens here.

One Soviet source claims to have overheard a postal clerk saying that 1,500 death notices of Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan had been sent out by early February.

A former student who was drafted into the paratroopers hurt his spine in training and is now telling friends how lucky he was since his unit was among the first into Afghanistan and suffered "heavy casualties."

A Moscow schoolgirl was reportedly excused from classes to stay home with her mother, who was hysterical with fear because she had not heard from her husband, a colonel on duty in Afghanistan.

In Tashkent, according to another rumor, there was not enough room in the hospitals for local residents because so many beds were filled with wounded Soviet troops from Afghanistan.

Soviet soldiers in Afghanistan

The reports are impossible to check but, true or false, they indicate the growing awareness and concern about Afghanistan.

The Kremlin is extraordinarily sensitive to the subject of casualties. Its entire propaganda campaign is designed to play down Soviet involvement in Afghanistan while simultaneously whipping up national support by depicting the move as an effort to forestall imperialist plans to install a hostile government on its southern border, one Western diplomat suggested.

The official silence about Afghanistan contrasts sharply with the situation 11 years ago when Soviet troops fought bitter skirmishes with the Chinese over the disputed Damansky Island along the border near the Pacific coast, one Soviet intellectual noted.

At that time, Soviet border guards killed in the action were lauded and the official press carried out reports of those awarded posthumous medals, this source said. The difference, he added, was that the Damansky Island action was widely seen as "defending the homeland. Afghanistan is not."

Among other supporters of the Soviet action are traditional Marxists who truly believe it is a Soviet obligation to help transform Afghanistan's feudal society into a socialist one.

There are also nationalists who feel that it is important that the Soviet Union secure its strategic position in Afghanistan, especially against the Chinese.

Those opposed to the Soviet involvement are reluctant to speak about it, even privately. "The KGB has two tasks," one Moscow intellectual said, only half in jest: "To make people be silent and to make it clear to the leadership what the people really think."

An economist, Viktor Sokirko, sent a petition to President Brezhnev last month arguing against the move into Afghanistan and asking him to withdraw the troops. Thirteen days later he was arrested.

Generally, those who were already disaffected are opposed to the intervention, but often for very parochial reasons. A writer worried that the Western response to Afghanistan would result in a tightening of internal political controls, thus further inhibiting his artistic freedom.

In the end, the most important reactions may still be those of the parents, like the Russian mother with the photograph in the mourning frame, who must ask themselves: "What did he die for?"

The end of medicare?

An Editorial

For $60,000, which is about what B.C. doctors will average in net income this year, you might expect a little more respect both for the system that takes the pain out of bill collecting and for the patient on whose behalf the bill is paid.

But no. All we hear are complaints that $60,000 is nowhere near enough to compensate them for their skills and dedication to humanity; that relatively speaking the industrial worker is better off; that just to make ends meet they have to see 40 to 50 patients a day, which isn't good for patient or doctor; and that, all in all, doctors would be better off billng the patient rather than the government.

The evidence presented by officers of the B.C. Medical Association before the Hall inquiry into health services in Canada not only had all the earmarks of a campaign to rid the nation of medicare; it was the boldest bid yet made by B.C. doctors to put the public on notice that that is what will happen if the medical profession doesn't get its way with the provincial government in November when negotiations for 1981 fees begin.

Initially it was Dr. Mel Petreman, the association's incumbent president, who made the point that if Victoria doesn't correct "the deterioration of physicians' relative net earning power," the BCMA will exercise its "strike" weapon and lead its members into balance-billing of their patients 365 days later.

To reinforce the point, the man who will succeed Dr. Petreman in May, Dr. Alex Mandeville, figured that doctors are worth 38 per cent more that they are currently getting and that to be in the same ballpark the government would have to reimburse them $20.15 instead of $12.50 for a patient's first visit.

Coming off a two-year contract that gave them a 17 per cent increase and a net average annual income of something in excess of $60,000, that's hard for anyone to swallow, let alone Health Minister Rafe Mair, the man who has budgeted for a 21 per cent increase in the total cost of medicare this year.

Any sympathy the doctors might have elicited for their contention that provincial governments are the root cause of medicare's decay (by messing around with health dollars returned from Ottawa) evaporated with Dr. Petreman's admission that B.C. doctors favor a form of balance-billing anyway.

Alternatively, they would prefer a scheme patterned on ICBC's, in which premiums would be adjusted, upward of course, to pay for the province's 50 per cent share of medicare costs.

That would get the government out of the doctors' hair as much as it would get the doctors out of medicare. It fits the present mood of the B.C. Medical association perfectly.

Canada's 16-year-old medicare scheme is clearly in a lot of trouble when doctors can talk and act the way the B.C. doctors talked and acted last week in front of former Supreme Court of Canada Justice Emmett Hall, the man who helped set it up.

Dr. Mandeville, we thought, summarized the 1980 approach to universal health care rather neatly when he said: "B.C. has done a bit better (financially) than doctors in other provinces, but even if we're on top, it's no great thing to be on top of a pile of losers."

If that's how he feels then maybe he was right again to reassure the public that "Canadian doctors have not become rogues and charlatans in the first decade of medicare."

'Opt out all the way'

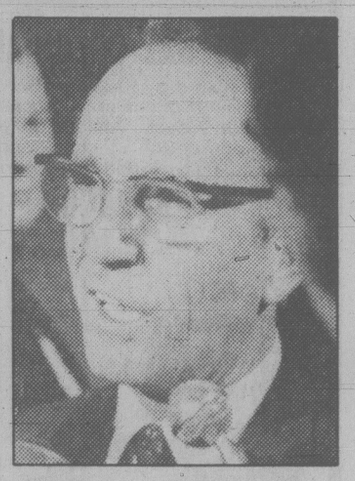

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

The father of medicare in Canada, T.C. Douglas (premier of Saskatchewan when medicare was introduced there and a former leader of the New Democratic Party), has described the only policy which can end the excessive opting out of doctors from the health plans of Ontario and some other provinces.

"You can't make a doctor work under a plan if he doesn't want to," said Mr. Douglas. "But you can say that if he's out, he's out. He must collect all his fees from his patients, who should be notified that the doctor is out of the plan and that they wll not be able to recover any part of his fees from the plan." It is a policy already in effect in Quebec.

Mr. Douglas is right.

A number of provinces have been unfair to doctors in the fee increases they have allowed them. Dr. Lawrence Wilson, president of the Canada Medical Association, pointed out last month that since 1971 payment for doctors' services has increased by only 36.8 per cent, while the consumer price index has gone up by 75.2 per cent and the average hourly earnings of Canadians as a whole by more than 100 per cent.

DOUGLAS . . . 'the only policy'

Ontario has been a principal offender. It is a state of affairs which must be corrected.

But that being done, Mr. Douglas' proposal should follow, or our much valued medicare plans will be down the drain.

Russell Baker

NEW YORK — I see by the latest poll that brown-eyed Anabaptists who don't eat all their oatmeal prefer Ronald Reagan to Jimmy Carter, while, among Illinois women under 45 who know what a horse collar is, John Anderson has a clear advantage over George Bush.

It's wonderful what the polling technologists can do these days. Tell them how tall you are, whether you've got corns and what your grade was in tenth-grade algebra, and they'll tell you who's going to be elected to the Sewer Commission. What's more, their computations are so accurate you don't even have to bother to vote.

The advances in polling technologies have been a godsend to political reporters. Nowadays there is no reason for a political reporter to get out of bed unless he wants to impress his publisher. All he has to do is wait for the polling experts to hand him a batch of computer paper that tells him everything, then translate it into basic English.

'Before political polling was brought to its present high state, the political reporter had to tramp around the continent with a suitcase containing a change of socks and a bottle of whisky cultivating professional politicians who might or might not know who was ahead in their bailiwicks.

When you got to the man who was supposed to have his hand on the pulse of the people, his ear to the ground and his feet in the grass roots, it often turned out that he had his feet on the pulse, his ear to the grass roots and his hand on the ground.

It was a very inexact kind of work, made more difficult by the tendency of many politicians to lie about the prospects of their darlings.

Meeting canny old Boss Perkins at an Indiana fish fry, you would ask how Buck Diffencanker seemed to be running out there in southern Indiana. "Buck's so far ahead the rest of the field can't even see his dust," he would tell you.

Having a big stake in Buck's campaign, Boss Perkins wasn't about to go honest and confess that Buck was doomed to be buried two minutes after the polls closed. No point in having the newspapers kill Buck any deader than he already was since, this being politics, his opponent might be trampled to death by a herd of steers two days before election.

It was a very inexact profession, political reporting in those days. Of course, the better reporters were not so easy to fool, and the real old-timers who had been going to the fish fries for years and years had developed skills and a feeling for politics that gave them a sense of ease and confidence.

This is why they were all able to report so far in advance of Election Day that Thomas E. Dewey had Harry Truman beaten bare in 1948.

In my brief fling at political reporting, I was never able to feel anything but hopelessly incompetent with these seasoned veterans. What awed me most particularly was their unfailing skill at finding taxi drivers willing to deliver pithy political commentary.

They could arrive in a strange town at noon, hail a taxi and by 6 p.m. have a story on the presses based on cab driver commentary that rivalled Walter Lippmann for trenchancy.

When I got into town, however, the cab drivers all went mum. "What's the talk about the election out here?" I always asked.

"Election? What election?"

"You know — about the president."

"President of what?"

Well, it wasn't always that bad. Sometimes the cab driver would say he hadn't heard any talk about the election, but there sure was a lot of excitement about baseball. The only punchy reply my question ever got from a cab driver was: "Whichever one of them gets in down there in Washington, things aren't going to get any better in this country until we stand a lot of people up against the wall and shoot 'em."

Inability to find cab drivers capable of brilliant political commentary persuaded me finally that I lacked the talent for political reporting, and I abandoned it without regret. Too soon, too soon, alas.

How sweet it would be now to arrive in a district town and hail a taxi. I would not ask the uncommunicative fellow about politics. After inspecting him closely, I would say, "You are going to vote for Ronald Reagan."

He would doubtless stare in amazement.

"There's no doubt of it," I would tell him. "Cab drivers over the age of 25 with sideburns extending below the ear lobes and tattoos of a heart pierced by a dagger on the right forearm will vote for Reagan by a majority of four-to-one."

I'll bet that would loosen him up and start a flow of highly quotable commentary, but thanks to the polls I would no longer have to listen. Come to think of it, I wouldn't even have to be in that distant town. I would probably be home in bed.

Carter, Reagan look unbeatable

By CLAUDE ADAMS
FP New Service

CHICAGO — Senator Edward Kennedy's presidential hopes were all but crushed Tuesday by voters in Illinois, a state that was instrumental in putting his brother John into the White House 20 years ago.

The other big winner Tuesday was Republican Ronald Reagan, who confounded the pollstars by rolling up a 49 to 37 per cent victory over native son Congressman John Anderson.

Anderson, an eloquent, white-haired liberal who was hoping for a coup here to give his campaign further momentum, insisted later that Reagan's support nationally did not have the broad base necessary to defeat Carter in November.

For the seventh time in eight primary battles so far this year, President Carter, the most successful non-campaigner in American history, beat Kennedy by a convincing margin — in this case by 65 to 30 per cent of the vote.

The result cast a pall of gloom over Kennedy supporters but in New York, Kennedy gamely announced he would press on, and that the Illinois result should not be interpreted as a public vote of confidence in Carter's domestic and foreign policies.

Kennedy is staking his survival as a presidential candidate in New York, site of the next important primary next week.

Bured in the numbers was the candidacy of George Bush, the former United Nations ambassador whose fortunes have been in decline since his impressive victory two months ago in Iowa.

Bush, fast becoming the forgotten candidate, could manage only 11 per cent of the vote.

President Carter carried every segment of the state, and even won the black vote by a landslide margin.

Swallows return

Times News Services

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, Calif. — Ringing church bells signalled the swallows' annual return today from Argentina to the historic Mission San Juan Capistrano.

About 1,000 people jammed into the mission courtyard to welcome the birds, and up to 50,000 people were expected in the city during the day to take part in a fiesta marking the return of the birds.

Legend says the faithful cliff swallows return to the mission every year on March 19 — the feast of St. Joseph. The Franciscan fathers who run the mission have always disclaimed any religious significance in the event, but as far as anyone knows the birds were late only once, in 1935, when a storm blew them off course.

Begin, Sadat plan U.S. talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat will visit the U.S. capital for separate talks with President Carter in April, White House officials announced today.

White House press secretary Jody Powell, announcing the new move in the bogged-down talks over Palestinian autonomy, said the dates for the meetings have not been set.

Powell said the Israeli and Egyptian leaders will visit Washington "to review the progress and pace of autonomy negotiations for the West Bank and Gaza."

"The negotiations are being conducted in accordance with the principles of the Camp David accord," which the three leaders signed in September, 1978, Powell said.

The agreements reached by the United States, Israel and Egypt in Camp David, Md., provided for negotiations to settle the question of Palestinian autonomy on the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip, Arab territories occupied by Israel following the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. The agreements also led to the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Gold buoyed, dollar down

LONDON (UPI) — Gold bounced back up above the $500 mark in London and Zurich today and the dollar dropped on European money markets.

A bullion dealer in London where the morning fix price was $514 — up $34 from Tuesday's closing $480.50 — said most speculators thought gold was underpriced.

Bathe in solar energy

A unique offer for 100 B.C. residents to own a solar domestic hot water system

A major demonstration program has been announced for 100 solar domestic hot water systems. It will offer a number of B.C. residents an excellent investment plus an individual opportunity to help solve energy problems.

The areas selected to participate in the program are Victoria City, Vancouver City, Nanaimo/Departure Bay, Penticton/Summerland, Fort Nelson and Cranbrook.

Solar domestic hot water systems can be installed in new or existing housing. They preheat the hot water supply and save 25 to 75 percent of the natural gas, electricity or oil used by conventional water heating systems. Under this special program, the cost to you would be between $1000 and $1500. The remainder will be met under the program in return for your cooperation in the program during the first year of system operation.

If you live in one of the areas listed above, in an owner-occupied, non-strata residential house, you may apply to become an owner of a solar hot water system. Should there be more qualified applicants than can be accommodated, selection will be made by draw.

The systems will be selected by the program staff from accredited suppliers. Each system will be monitored for one year and you will be expected to assist and allow system inspections by the program staff or by the supplier.

A further requirement will be the mounting of solar collector panels (approximately 6-9 square metres) on roof or yard space with an unobstructed southerly exposure to the sun. Tank space, preferably near the existing water tank will also be required. Construction of your house should allow easy pipework installation between the collectors and the tank.

If you would like to participate in this program and think you can meet the requirements, mail the coupon in this advertisement today, to Solar DHW Project, P.O. Box 123, 500 Lougheed Highway, Essondale, B.C. V3C 1J0. You will receive more detailed information and be asked to complete a preliminary questionnaire.

New Bank Act's a boon . . . for the banks

WALTER STEWART
FP News Service

OTTAWA — "If they don't pass the Bank Act pretty soon," says Bob MacIntosh, "I'm going to pass the Kool-Aid."

Only kidding, of course; MacIntosh doesn't really plan to launch another Jonestown massacre. That would be frowned on in banking circles, which are his circles.

MacIntosh is chairman of the Canadian Bankers' Association's committee on the revision of the Bank Act (translation: lobbyist) and executive vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia. He is a tall, lean man with rugged features and an edge to his tongue. He doesn't look or sound like a banker — which is to say he doesn't look or sound like a stuffed shirt — rather, he looks as if he might try out for right-winger on the New England Whalers if banking goes sour.

It won't, though. Banking rarely goes sour, and when the Bank Act revisions that have MacIntosh in such a state finally pass into law, it will be sweeter than ever.

The Bank Act is the instrument by which banks are regulated, and have been since 1871. The law, revised every ten years, is dubbed "the banks' act" by some critics, who think Canada's 11 chartered banks are already the spoiled darlings of the financial system. It sets out who can do what, with which, and to whom. For example, it doesn't define banking — we have no legal definition — but it does tell the banks that they can lend money on mortgages, and then confines that lending to 10 per cent of Canadian deposit liabilities and debentures. It allows them to engage in commercial lending — to businesses — a field closed to their rivals in trust and mortgage companies, but it bars them from acting as trustees, leaving that field to the competition.

A small change in the Bank Act can have large repercussions not merely for the world of finance, but for all of us.

The last time the act was amended, in 1967, the banks were allowed into mortgage lending for the first time, and the ceiling of six per cent on bank interest charges was lifted.

That change was called "A Blueprint for Competition", but whether it worked out that way remains in dispute. Jim Sayers, secretary of the Trust Companies Association of Canada, says "I don't call it competition when you send a steamroller out against a bicycle."

The banks charged into consumer finance, and flattened the finance companies. (One of them, IAC, is seeking some sort of revenge; it has turned itself into Continental Bank.) Chargex and Mastercharge became familiar words — like overdraft. They plunged into the mortgage business, and took a large share of the market away from mortgage firms and insurance companies.

Consumers benefitted, as loan costs came down — although they're not exactly low today — and mortgages became easier to get, through your friendly local banker.

The banks multiplied their assets seven times between the passage of the bill and the end of 1979, and their profits multiplied three times and life became one sweet song.

Because the change in a few paragraphs of legislation can have such sweeping consequences, everyone in the financial business — banks, trust and mortgage companies, finance firms, leasing and factoring concerns, data banks, even the cattlemen's association and dental groups (all the big money men) began pushing and shoving at the bank bill back in 1974.

They are still at it.

In the meantime, we have had a white paper, three versions of a new act, committee meetings beyond counting and enough jawboning between bureaucrats and lobbyists to last for quite some time. The act-to-be has gone through more revisions than Russian history, but it has yet to be enacted, and the old version has to be re-extended each year.

Canada is now 36 months pregnant.

Senior officials of the department of finance believe that what was once Bill C-57, and then C-15 and then C-14 will be approved by the new Parliament as Bill C-whatever quite soon.

"The new bill will be very like the version approved by a Liberal government, but not passed, then approved by the Tories, but not passed," explained one finance official. "Surely it will slip through easily now."

Optimist.

The other day the Canadian Bankers' Association fired off a letter to the new minister of finance, asking him to re-consider its request for amendments. Ken Graydon, executive vice-president of the Canadian Automobile Dealers' Association was down prowling the corridors of power with a sheaf of leaflets in his hand and fire in his eye, demanding changes. Carne Bray, Toronto-based president of the Associaton of Canadian Financial Corporations, who comes to Ottawa about as often as most senators, is packed for another trip because "the act as now written is bad for us, bad for Canada, and bad for the consumer."

The Bank Act is the instrument by which banks are regulated, and, according to some critics who think Canada's 11 chartered banks are already the spoiled darlings of the financial system, it's a licence to make money.

That's how the smooth, legislative process works; a little screaming, a little leaning, a little stalling and a lot of palaver.

There are five main changes in the new act:

— Entry to the banking system will be easier. Instead of the present process of chartering through Parliament, banks will incorporate by letters patent issued on the advice of the Inspector General of Banks, William A. Kennett. Kennett says, "This will help competition." Perhaps. The market is so dominated by the Big Five banks, who hold 90 per cent of all assets, that newcomers may find themselves in for a rough ride.

— Foreign banks, which already operate in Canada through subsidiaries, will be invited, persuaded and shoved under the limbs of the Bank Act. No foreign bank will be allowed to conduct any banking business here "directly or indirectly". They can apply to become banks here, or get out; but when they sign up, they will be subject to licenses, and their total share of the Canadian market will not be allowed to exceed eight per cent of bank assets. This, too, was announced as a boon to competition, but it is hard to see how the 56 foreign banks lining up to join the system will make much dint in Canada by dividing up eight per cent of the market. They wanted in, now they're in; like the man who rode the tiger.

— A Canadian Payments Association will be established, for clearing cheques. At present, banks do all the clearing for their rivals — trust companies, credit unions, caisses populaires, etc., for a fee, and control all matters of policy. Now others will be allowed in on the management of the system, a step that may not mean much now, but will become more crucial as we move towards a more complex system of handling data, debts and payments through electronic funds transfers.

— The reserves chartered banks are required to lodge with the Bank of Canada as a lever to control money supplies will be reduced. The main reserve now is on demand deposits (such as current accounts, on which banks pay no interest), and banks are required to leave 12 per cent of these in reserve. That will be reduced to eight per cent, which the banks say is still too much. They don't get paid interest on this money, and Stan Davison, vice chairman of the Bank of Montreal, says, "This is the highest tax we pay." It is, too. The reserves run about $6 billion, which, if put out at 14 per cent, could earn the banks $840 million a year. That is the bank's highest tax in part because their real tax, about 18 per cent of their profits, is so low. The banks' critics, who say the system is simply a low licence fee for the lucrative business, complain that the lowering of reserves will give the banks another billion dollars a year with which to get even bigger than they are today.

— Banks will be allowed to go into leasing — renting cars, trucks, planes, mining equipment, whatever — and into factoring, which is buying up other peoples' debts at a discount and then collecting them. ("Hi, there. This is your friendly bank. Pay up.") The automobile dealers' association, whose members do a lot of car leasing, claim that the banks will be able to take over the business, because they can get money cheaply and readily, "After which," says Fern Turpin, a major Ottawa dealer, and chairman of the association's lobby, "they will jack up prices and the consumer will suffer."

The banks will get most of what they wanted in the new act. It looked good when the white paper came down in 1976, and it looks better today. That paper proposed to prohibit bank officers from being directors of outside firms; now they can be, as long as their own bank approves. In the earlier version, foreign banks were not subject to licences, and they were allowed 15 per cent of the market. Now they are licensed, and their market is cut almost in half. A bid to keep the banks out of the data-processing business has been straight-armed. They are only allowed to do data-processing directly related to the business of banking, but that business gets broader every day.

The banks lost a few points — they wanted interest paid on their reserves, for example, and they wanted an automatic majority control of the Canadian Payments Association and they didn't get either — but they won more than they lost. They say this is because of the sweet reason of their arguments, and their critics say it is because MPs and senators fall down flat whenever a banker enters the room. In fact, the bankers received a chummy welcome from the Senate Banking Committee, which contains six bank directors under the chairmanship of Senator Salter Hayden, an honorary bank director. However, the House of Commons committee was not quite so friendly, although only a few members knew enough about banking to ask tough questions.

Whichever way it came about, by sweet reason or razzle-dazzle, the banks came away with the lion's share of the swag from the Bank Act changes, and while there may be some fiddling yet to come, that is likely to remain the case.

Inspector General of Banks Bill Kennett says, "We've been at this thing so long that everybody is ready to give way a little, just to get the uncertainty over with."

The bankers say that Canada will benefit as the new legislation takes hold.

Maybe.

At least the banks will.

12-month trade figure up

OTTAWA (CP) — Retail sales in January reached $5.64 billion, up 12.7 per cent from January, 1979, but almost 30 per cent below December's $8.01 billion, say Statistics Canada figures released today.

Compared with January, 1979, sales were higher in all 28 trade groups except general merchandise stores where they dropped 0.7 per cent. The largest gains were for jewelry stores at 30.2 per cent, family shoe stores, at 24.7 per cent and personal accessories stores at 22.1 per cent.

Retail sales advanced in all provinces, ranging from a high of 17.4 per cent in Alberta to a low of 5.4 per cent in Prince Edward Island. In Statistics Canada's four selected metropolitan areas, Montreal sales rose 11.8 per cent; Toronto, 13.4 per cent; Winnipeg, 8.9 per cent; and Vancouver, 14.1 per cent.

On a seasonally-adjusted basis, retail sales for January were $6.76 billion, an increase of 2.6 per cent from December's $6.58 billion.

Copycats, put your fee in the kitty

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Before long Canadians may have to get a licence to operate a photocopying machine and pay royalties to authors every time they borrow a book from the library.

Those are two of a number of recommendations being considered by members of a special committee of the federal consumer and corporate affairs department charged with updating Canada's copyright laws.

Frank Keyes, an Ottawa lawyer and special adviser to the government on copyright matters, said in an interview the revisions are bound to have a far-reaching impact on the ways copy-mad Canadians copy or use the works of others.

Keyes said under existing laws everyone is supposed to have exclusive rights to the things they produce.

It makes no difference if the creation is a book, play, painting, musical score, photograph, film, sound recording, or even a letter home to mother or a child's stickman drawing.

The creation belongs solely to the creator — or if he is employed, then his employer — and technically, no one can use or copy the material without permission or payment of fees.

Needless to say, Keyes lamented, the law is broken countless times daily.

And the people who make their living from their artistic endeavors are angry.

They want a fairer deal and Keyes said he can't blame them.

He said the problem is that while the law already has broad protections, it is unchanged since 1924 and fails to take into account technological developments since.

The law says nothing about sound films, long-playing records, video-tapes, photocopying machines, computer banks or satellite communications.

And because it doesn't, there is confusion and dissension about how far copyrights extend.

Keyes said authors and publishers have been pressing the government for action in the one area where they feel there is the greatest amount of infringement — photocopying.

They would like to form a collective to licence owners of photocopying machines.

The ramifactions would be extensive, especially in the school system, Keyes said, but the licences would give authors at least some compensation for their material that is copied.

Keyes said there is pressure for new rights to be incorporated in the copyright laws.

For example, authors want a public lending right whereby they'd receive payment every time one of their books is borrowed from a library.

Such a system already exists in 10 countries including Australia, Sweden, New Zealand and Germany.

Performers also want protection from someone copying their act. At present there is none.

Artists are seeking a droit de suite or following right which would entitle them to a share of the profits if a work they sold subsequently increases in value. Such is the case in Germany, Belgium and France.

Film producers are looking for copyright protection to prevent videotaping of films unless a royalty is paid first.

There is also a move to have cablevision companies start paying royalties for the films and programs they air.

Composers are asking for an increase in the royalties that they are entitled to by copyright licence.

The licence says composers are to receive two cents a side per record. But the fee was set in 1924 when there were only 78s. When long-plays came along the licence was interpreted to mean two cents for each tune.

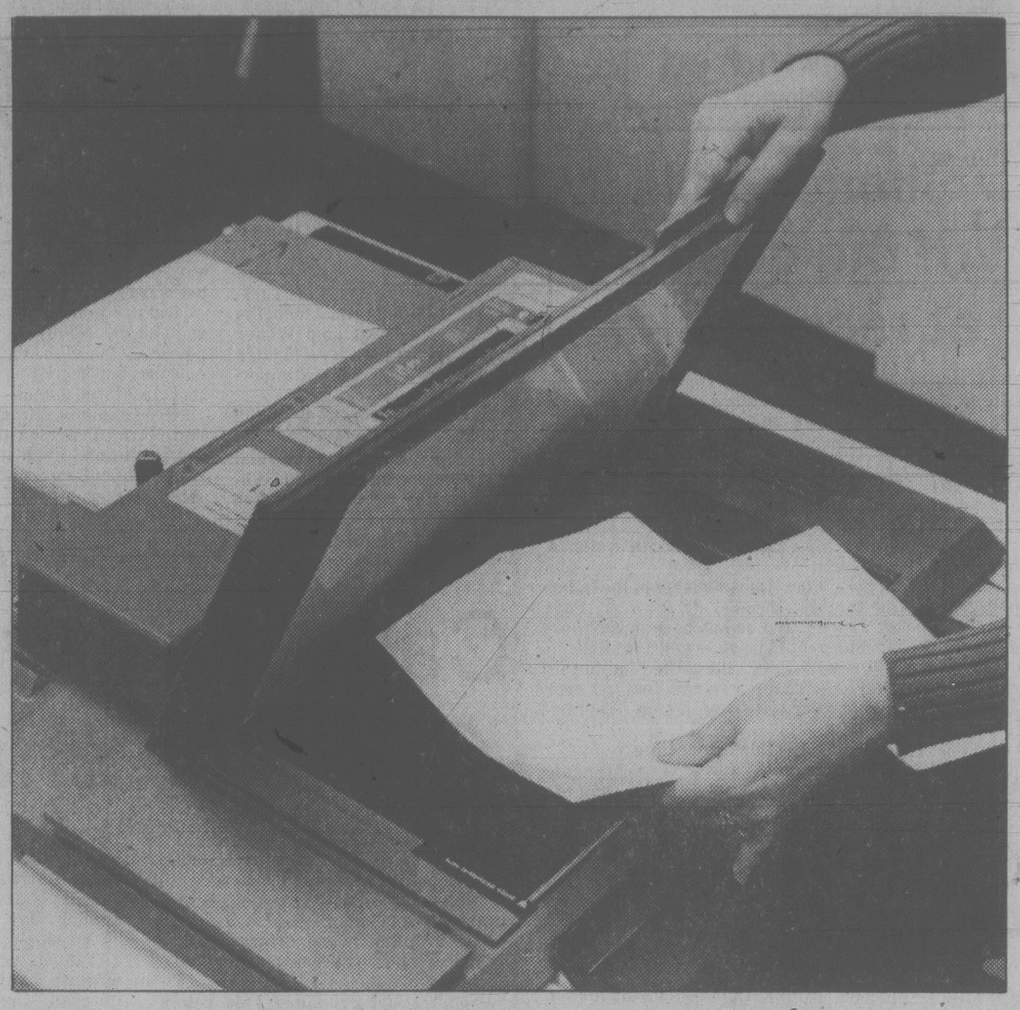

The composers argue there has been such a cost-of-living increase the payment is ridiculous.

Keyes said the issues to be tackled are highly complex. They include a determination of one of the thorniest problem the committee will have to grapple with — fair dealing.

In other words, how much of someone else's material can a person copy or use without infringing on copyright.

The committee is expected to bring down its final recommendations in about six months.

Said Keyes: "It can't come soon enough."

Under new copyright laws licences may be required to operate photo copiers

Boost in funding short of target - Langwood

Funding for handicapped workshops in B.C. will be increased by 37 per cent with an additional $1.3 million being spent this year, Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy announced today.

But Dr. George Stocker, chairman of the board of the Capital Region Association for the Mentally Handicapped, said this solution isn't completely satisfactory and Langwood Workshop may still have to be closed.

McCarthy said the formula on which the 75 centres for the handicapped in the province are funded will remain the same but the amount paid to the centres on a per-hour basis will be increased to $1 from 73 cents, effective April 1.

The ministry expects to spend $3.9 million this year, up from last year's $2.6 million.

Stocker said the formula should be changed so that severely handicapped persons receive more aid than those who are less handicapped and who can earn some income from their work.

Stocker said CRAMH intends to take some of the increase destined for Sentinel Workshop, which it also operates, and divert it to Langwood to make up its deficit.

"We were encouraged by someone in the presence of the minister to juggle the books this way but we really don't think it's the answer. Of course, then we're faced with the terrible moral dilemma of taking handicapped people's labor and appropriating funds to help their less fortunate brothers."

Stocker said the ministry has a responsiblity to ensure that the mentally handicapped receive a basic level of education even if they are not capable of producing an income and that the ministry's funding formula reflect that.

McCarthy indicated that the ministry's policy is to encourage the handicapped to develop social and work related skills that lead to greater personal independence.

Stocker noted the handicapped at Langwood are often learning such basic things as telling time and counting money.

The association's board met Tuesday night, he said, and based on an indication of what the minister's announcement would be, agreed to keep Langwood open until June 30.

"The minister has promised us that serious consideration is being given to the question of funding and we think the three-month extension will give her time to do that," said Stocker.

What a hang-up!

A would-be thief got hung-up — literally — while trying to break into an apartment block at 1037 Richardson early today.

The city police report said it best:

"On arrival we found, protruding from a small window, two feet to which was attached a person trapped in that position and hanging inside the premises."

Ronald George McWilliams, 30, appeared in court today charged with attempted breaking and entering, possession of house-breaking tools and breaking and entering.

The latter charge stems from an incident at Helm's Inn, 668 Superior, earlier in the morning when the manageress found a man rifling a cash drawer in the office.

The man fled with about $100.

McWilliams is also charged with breaking into a dry cleaning store in the city Saturday.

He was released on bail when he appeared in court Monday.

Divers hunt knife off Sidney wharf

Saanich police divers were searching off Sidney wharf this morning for the weapon believed used in the slaying Monday of a 31-year-old Saanich woman.

Insp. Robin Stewart said divers are looking for a pearl-handled knife believed thrown into the water after the killing of Marion MacKay in her home at 5420 Old West Saanich Road.

Charged with first degree murder is Barry Dennis McFadden, a 29-year-old self-employed plumber.

Police found MacKay's body, bound in an orange plastic bag, in a boat parked in the driveway of McFadden's home at 10327 Bowerbank in Sidney.

McFadden appeared in provincial court Tuesday afternoon charged with first degree murder and was remanded in custody one week for bail application and date for preliminary hearing.

Stewart said MacKay was stabbed numerous times and officers are waiting for a pathologist's report.

Meanwhile, friends of the dead women are shocked and dismayed.

Her co-workers at the Worker's Compensation Board, where she was a claims reviewer, declined to comment.

"We'd rather not say anything . . . she was a good worker . . . she'll be missed by us all," said one.

A close friend, Larry Jackson, said he was horrified.

"I can't understand it. She was such a beautiful person."

MacKay lived alone in the house which she, her mother, who lives in Vancouver, and a former boyfriend had bought about a year ago.

They had fixed up the place and put it on the market two months ago.

Eight boys face charges in Saanich burglary spree

Saanich police believe they have cracked a major juvenile crime ring operating in the municipality for five months.

Eight boys aged 13 to 16 have been charged in connection with a spate of house break-ins in the Shelbourne-Gordon Head area.

Sgt. Fred Wooster, head of the community services division, indicated further charges may be laid.

He said officers have not determined how many break-ins the group committed but said it was at least 15.

The goods taken included stereo and electronic equipment, jewelry, liquor and money totalling several hundreds dollars.

Police have recovered a stereo set that was hidden in some bushes, and have seized some stolen watches and calculators from homes of the suspects.

Wooster said the break-ins date back to early November. Practically all involved fairly new homes with entry gained by smashing a window or sliding a window out of its aluminum frame.

The majority occurred during the afternoon or early evening while occupants were out.

Police got a break in the case March 13 when they caught a juvenile rifling through belongings in a house in the 1600-block Kisber.

A neighbor saw two youths enter the house and called police.

The second suspect fled before police arrived.

Marijuana-induced cancer 'down the road'

Smoking marijuana may be a greater cancer risk than inhaling tobacco, a public forum was told Tuesday night.

Dr. Malcolm Brigden, part of a four-member panel of medical specialists, said the way marijuana is smoked makes it potentially more dangerous than tobacco.

The marijuana cigarette is smoked right to the end and the smoke inhaled deeply into the lungs and held there as long as possible, Bridgen said.

"We may be seeing a lot of marijuana-induced cancer further down the road."

Brigden is a cancer specialist at Royal Jubilee and Victoria General hospitals.

Joining him on the panel were Dr. Peter Coy, director of the Victoria Cancer Clinic; Dr. Edwin Henry, occupational health physician, B.C. ministry of health; and Dr. Bruce Dunn, research associate in the department of medical genetics at the University of B.C.

The forum at the Newcombe Auditorium, attended by 330 people, was sponsored by the Times and the Victoria branch of the Canadian Cancer Society.

Brigden said more than 90 per cent of all lung cancers are directly attributable to smoking.

"It is the cancer people give to themselves," he said.

From 700 to 800 people in B.C. die every year from lung cancer, he said, adding that these are deaths that are completely self-induced.

Unfortunately since the rise of the women's liberation movement, more and more women are smoking and this is likely going to be reflected sooner or later in cancer statistics, he said. The same holds true for the increasing number of young people who smoke.

In answer to a question, he said the cancer risk to a non-smoker from other people's cigarette smoke is probably not that great. But the risk of heart or some other form of lung disease is quite significant.

What about the danger of smoke from wood-burning stoves?

Dunn said the issue is debatable at this stage but it is known that smoke from incomplete combustion is damaging to the lungs, having roughly the same effect as cigarette smoke.

Another concern with more and more people returning to wood burning is the creosote which is deposited in the chimney, Dunn said.

The creosote is potentially hazardous, he said, and he cautioned that anyone who cleans chimneys should wear gloves and avoid the soot as much as possible.

Coy said, in answer to another question, that it was felt in the past that few if any cancers were hereditary.

Now, however, the belief is there may be a predisposition toward certain cancers that can be traced to parents or grandparents. This is particularly true with breast cancer.

In his speech, Coy dealt with the cancer risk from x-ray radiation, comparing it with the risk we face every day from natural sources of radiation in the atmosphere.

Using a technical measuring method, Coy showed that although the exposure to radiation was greater from medical diagnosis than from other man-made sources, such as consumer products, nuclear power plants or coal-fired power plants, it was not nearly as great as that from natural radiation sources.

There are also ways of reducing the risk from radiation such as the use of protective shields and proper focusing of the treatment, Coy said.

His conclusion was: "This is a procedure whose risks are much smaller than the gains that are achieved."

Dunn dealt with two myths about cancer. One that everything causes cancer so why worry about it and the other that the doses given test animals are so high they bear no relevance to normal human consumption.

As for the first myth, Dunn said only a minority of chemicals cause cancer and that is why it is worthwhile to find out which ones they are and warn the public about them.

Dealing with the second myth, Dunn said most studies indicate the risk of cancer is related to the dosage of a chemical. Test animals fed high doses of a chemical get a high frequency of tumors.

Low doses that humans are exposed to may produce fewer tumors but "a cancer rate as low as one in 100,000 means 2,500 cancers a year in North America.

Dunn also said there is a strong link between diet and cancer.

A prudent diet to reduce the chances of colon, breast and prostate cancer would be to cut back on fats and meats and increase the consumption of fresh vegetables and fruits, he said.

Henry focussed on the hazard of asbestos, two-thirds of which is used in construction materials.

He said the substance is used as a filler in rubber and plastic, is contained in filter cloths and paper, insulating materials, tiles, shingles, clapboard as well as in pipes and pipe covering.

However, he said it is only hazardous when dry and the fibres are broken up and floating in the air.

"A brief exposure for a short period of time can cause a malignant tumor," Henry said.

He said in time, it will be possible to determine which people are more or less prone to certain cancers and workers will be selected for certain jobs who have less chance of contacting the disease.

Silence tells of the deaths at race tracks

They never announce the deaths. They don't want the family to find out that way. So there is silence. Silence tells of death at a race track. Ricky Knotts, 28, drove his race-car at 180 miles per hour into a concrete wall at Daytona Beach this year. You heard the explosion of impact. You saw fire flash and disappear. The car hit another wall. Another explosion. And then you heard the death silence.

Why? Why does a man race cars? Death waits. A man knows it. Why then?

You know A. J. Foyt. Four times a winner of the Indianapolis 500, maybe the best race-car driver ever, Foyt has broken his back racing and he has been burned terribly. He is 45 years old, a millionaire — and a fatalist.

"That's exactly right," Foyt said. "The Man put us here — and He'll take us. That's a square deal if I ever heard of one . . . When your time's up, it's up — not before, not after."

Has death ever made Foyt think of quitting?

"In '57, I had a good friend — I won't tell you his name — killed. And he just laid on the track while we went by. The thought went through my mind whether I wanted to go on. I had to know in my mind if I wanted to do it. You just have to accept life the way it is — and I went on."

So death doesn't bother Foyt now?

"Not me. It does a lot of people. But I've damn near went out a couple times myself. It's something you learn to live with."

Why does Foyt keep going?

"It's fun."

They all say it is fun. In his garage at Indianapolis one year, a driver named Mel Kenyon took off his racing suit. His body was a scar, a pale and blank reminder of fire. His left hand was amputated. To drive, he wore a special glove that attached his stub of a hand to the steering wheel. In the garage after that 500, the stub was flame red, the color of raw meat, and Mel Kenyon dipped it in a bucket of water.

Someone asked Kenyon if he ever thought of quitting.

"Nope. Not as long as it's fun," he said.

They can no more say why they race than a mountaineer can say why he climbs. The highwire performer, Karl Wallenda, once explained why he went back up there after a fall in Detroit killed two members of his family and left another a paraplegic: "To be on the wire is life; the rest is waiting."

David Earl (Swede) Savage Jr. died at 26. He had been in quarter-midgets at 9, go-carts at 12, on a motorcycle at 15, in a stock car at 21, in an Indy car at 22. He was a prodigy, a rugged and handsome man. They called him The Next Great Driver.

Savage hit a wall in 1971 at Ontario Motor Speedway. Although doctors were surprised he lived, surprised the head injuries didn't leave him with brain damage, although they said he'd never race again. Swede Savage was in a car seven months later — finishing 12th in a 500-mile race on the same track where he'd been hurt.

At Indianapolis in 1972, Savage said, "The doctors were amazed. The brain cells just regenerated themselves. I had to find out if I could drive again."

Why

"Why not?"

You were nearly killed.

"You know, I don't remember anything about it. The last thing I remember is two days before the accident. All I know is that I need to drive."

To be on the wire is life.

The next year, on the wire, Savage crashed again, this time at Indianapolis, this time in flames. This time he died. One of every four drivers who ever raced at Indy has died in a race car. Dan Gurney once said, "Not too long ago, I lay awake in bed and I counted all the people I've known who died racing, and after a while, maybe an hour, I counted up to the number 57."

Soon after his melancholy roll call, Gurney got off the wire. He retired as a driver.

What the drivers call "fun" is not fun in the sense of play. They are inarticulate. They are men obsessed by "the most compelling, delightful, sensuously rewarding game in the world," as author Ken Purdy describes motor racing in his biography of former world champion Stirling Moss, "All But My Life." These drivers are men addicted to life on the edge.

And it is a joy to see them work.

"It is a challenge," said Gary Baker.

You don't know Gary Baker. "They're dead and not Ricky Knotts," Baker said. Like Knotts, Baker was making his first race at Daytona's 190-mph track. An hour before Knotts hit a wall, Baker slid out of control at 180 mph, sliding sideways in front of cars that plowed into him and shoved him into a wall.

Baker was not hurt.

He is 33 years old, married, father of three children. He is a lawyer and accountant in Nashville, where his clients include Waylon Jennings and Johnny Cash. He is part owner of two race tracks. From Monday through Friday, he wears three-piece suits and is a tall, handsome symbol of respectability.

"On weekends, instead of turning into a werewolf, I turn into a race driver," he said.

Why does a lawyer risk death in a race car?

"I wish I knew," Baker said. "If I did, maybe I could talk myself out of it."

He laughed when he said that. He didn't mean a word of it. He loves to race. To be on the wire is life. "Look at A. J. Foyt," the lawyer said. "If you look at his balance sheet, it's not General Motors, but it isn't bad. He doesn't need the money. Why does A. J. Foyt race? The same reason we all do. It's a challenge. To go fast, that's the challenge. It's just in some people.

"It's like climbing a mountain. Why climb a mountain? It's still going to be there tomorrow. To some people, it's silly, the idea of climbing a mountain. But to a man who lives to climb, it's not silly."

The death of Knotts made Baker "sick, just sick ... like losing a member of your family."

People who pay to watch car races do not pay to see death. They come to cheer men on a wire. Test pilots take planes to speeds and altitudes that push the sides of "the envelope," which is what they call the unknown borders of their work. Drivers work on "the ragged edge," their machines teetering on a delicate balance of friction and power, a balance that once lost can mean death.

Going up on the wire, pushing the side of the envelope, running on the ragged edge — man does it all because it is his nature, his majestic nature, to reach beyond himself. As a sculptor falls to battle with a hunk of marble, as a composer reaches for the stars with music produced in exquisite agony, so does a race driver take life to its limits.

He drives fast.

It's a big one for Cougars

It's down to cases for Victoria Cougars tonight in their battle for first place in the Western Division of the Western Hockey League.

Winners over Medicine Hat Tigers 7-4 before 2,725 fans Tuesday night at Memorial Arena, the Cougars meet Portland Winter Hawks at the Rose City tonight in what ranks as their most important game of the season.

The Winter Hawks lead the Cougars by three points, but the Cougars have one game in hand and, if they are to finish in front of the Hawks, a victory tonight is a must.

Portland defeated Victoria at Memorial Arena last week in the last meeting between the clubs.

Cougar coach Jack Shupe was more or less pleased with the performance of his club Tuesday, but thought there could have been an improvement in the backchecking department.

On the good-news side, he was impressed by the scoring power of the club, the Cougars now having scored 17 goals in their last three games.

Greg Adams, Brad Palmer and Barry Pederson paced the Cougar attack. Each scored two goals while Bob Smith got the other marker.

For Adams it was his 59th goal of the season, just seven shy of the record set by Mel Bridgman in the 1974-75 campaign.

Adams, who is Philadelphia-bound, having been signed as an under-age player last summer, also had two assists to run his points total for the season to 104.

Pederson boosted his goal production to 51, one tally coming on a power play and the other on a shorthanded situation that completed a surge in which the Cats counted three goals in the span of just 78 seconds.

That gave the Cougars a 4-2 margin after two periods and all the edge they needed.

Pederson now holds down second place in the WHL scoring race with 135 points, but is still far behind the leader Doug Wickenheiser of Regina Pats.

Palmer scored the first and last Cougar goals. He now has 43 on the season.

Steve Tsujuira and Ken Solheim each scored two goals for the Tigers who led 2-1 before the Cougar eruption late in the second period.

In other league games, Regina Pats squeezed by Saskatoon Blades 6-5 and Calgary Wranglers defeated Brandon Wheat Kings 5-3.

Cougars wind up the regular part of their season this weekend. They play in Seattle Thursday and Sunday and at home Saturday against New Westminster Bruins.

Cougars, Winter Hawks and Breakers will play an eight-game double round-robin series to determine the two Western playoff finalists.

In the Eastern Division, the first-place team will meet the sixth-place club, second will play fifth and third will meet fourth in best-of-seven series to determine three playoff teams.

The three winners will then play a single round robin with two finalists to meet in a best-of-seven series.

Tickets for the Cougar first round playoff games ($18 for the four games) will be available at the arena box office Saturday.

Canadians resent Olympic champs

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — To the pitfalls awaiting those striving for the top in professional hockey has been added an international rivalry, says a young Buffalo Sabres defenceman.

The problem arose after the U.S. Olympic team won the gold medal at Lake Placid last month.

"Some (Canadian-born) kids resent the fact they did so well and they're a little bit jealous of them," Larry Playfair said Tuesday. "I think they're wondering what the Americans can do and wanting to see how good these kids really are."

Playfair, a native of Fort St. James, B.C., offered the idea in a telephone interview from Laguna Beach, Calif., as the Sabres prepared to meet Los Angeles Kings, after he learned that U.S.-born John Harrington suffered facial injuries in an American Hockey League game Sunday.

Harrington, one of four Minnesotans with the National Hockey League club's Rochester farm team, was the first U.S. player hurt in hockey violence since the Olympics.

However, former U.S. star Mike Ramsey, the Sabres' No. 1 1979 draft choice, said violence did not influence his post-Olympics statement that he would not play in the AHL.

"It's just that everybody wants to play with the big club and avoid those 10-hour bus trips," said Ramsey, a defenceman. "They're fighting to get out. Here (the National Hockey League) it's not that dirty."

Harrington, a 180-pound winger who could have played in Switzerland but who signed a three-year contract with Buffalo, has had a sad start with Rochester. He saw a bench-clearing brawl against New Haven and picked up six stitches in his chin against Syracuse.

In his third game, he got a concussion, broken nose and loose teeth when he was checked by Hershey's Lou Franceschetti. Harrington practiced without pads two days later and said he would play again Friday.

No penalty was called on the play.

"It was a cheap shot," said Rochester winger Paul Crowley. "He had him checked — he didn't have to ram his nose into the ice."

Harrington was still wondering how Franceschetti could say it was a clean check.

"How did I get it in the back of my head if it was a clean shot?" he asked. "I didn't even notice him out there before the hit. There are guys in this league that are just hanging on when they can't do it talent-wise."

In his dressing room after the game, Franceschetti offerred: "My shoulder just connected with the back of his neck." He added that Harrington should be sent a welcome card to the AHL.

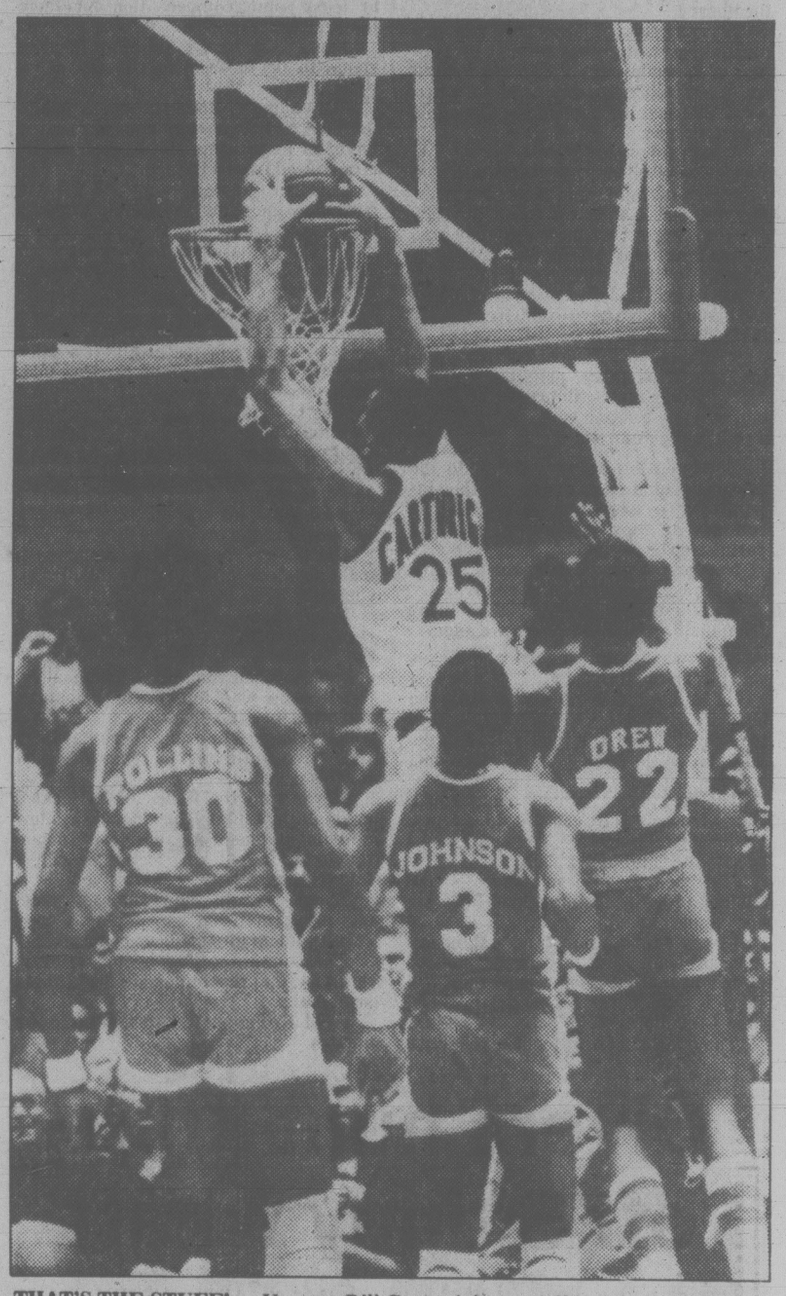

"I suppose everybody has second thoughts," said Harrington when asked if he still was content to play on the Buffalo farm. "In international play, they just challenge you with your talents, but in this league if they can't keep up they want to slow you down any way they can."

Harrington scored two goals in his first two AHL games and said he does not plan to become a fighter to survive.

"I'm not going to change the way I've played hockey for 15 years just to play for three years in the pros; that's not my idea."

Olympic team-mate Eric Strobel, another Minnesotan playing for Rochester and hoping for a shot with the Sabres, said he almost took an offer to play in West Germany before opting for Rochester.

"They may be taking a run at us, but it really is nothing I didn't expect," he said: "I still want a good taste of professional hockey."

THAT'S THE STUFF! — Up goes Bill Cartwright to stuff ball for basket with only 11 seconds remaining and give New York Knicks 111-110 National Basketball Association triumph over Atlanta Hawks in New York.

Capitals get serious in NHL playoff bid

The Canadian Press

Washington Capitals, having spent their first six years in the hinterlands of the National Hockey League, finally appear headed for the promised land.

The Capitals, headed for oblivion by Christmas when a long list of injuries to key personnel depleted the ranks, have the league's third best record since the all-star break and a playoff berth — only weeks ago a dreamer's folly — now is in their grasp.

A 4-1 win Tuesday night over Colorado Rockies extended Washington's unbeaten streak to seven games and lifted the Caps to 15th place in over-all league standings. Sixteen teams qualify for playoff action and the Caps, with only nine games left in their season, are hot enough to stand as odds-on favorites to qualify.

"Everything's relative in this world," Caps' owner Abe Pollin beamed when asked about the exuberance which followed Tuesday's win. Long-suffering Washington supporters went wild when the final buzzer sounded. Observers half expected them to start chanting, "We're No. 15, We're No. 15."

In other games, New York Islanders defeated Atlanta Flames 6-3, Minnesota North Stars edged Pittsburgh Penguins 4-3 and Boston Bruins played to a 3-3 tie with St. Louis Blues.

Mike Gartner, 20, an Ottawa native who played for Cincinnati of the World Hockey Association last season and joined the Caps this season, was not around during the painful growing years. He snapped a 1-1 tie in the second period at Landover, Md., by scoring in his eighth consecutive game. It was his 34th goal of the season.

"I don't know how long it can go on," Gartner said of his streak, "But I hope they can't stop the team. That's what counts. I'd give up my last eight goals if we won the last nine games."

Colorado, winless in eight games since beating the Caps on March 2, took a 1-0 lead on a goal by Lanny McDonald 33 seconds into the game.

After two fights led to five-minute penalties for two players from each team in the first 30 seconds of the second period, the Caps took control.

A goal by Mark Lofthouse tied it 1-1, and Gartner's goal at 13:55 put the Caps ahead. Alan Hangsleben and Dennis Maruk added insurance tallies midway through the final period.

Pistol Pete firing in early-day style

By Associated Press

With the National Basketball Association playoffs upcoming, Boston Celtics know they can count on an extra weapon who can still fire the ball through the hoop.

Veteran Pete Maravich fired all chambers Tuesday night, scoring a game-high 31 points, to help the Celtics shoot down Indiana Pacers 114-102. Pistol Pete logged 42 minutes in his longest effort since joining the Celtics last month.

"On a scale one-to-ten, I'd rate Pete about a seven, over-all," Boston coach Bill Fitch said. "Pistol is about a seven on offence and I'd say he's about halfway there on defense.

"All we want for the playoffs is 15 minutes of the best of Maravich. Anything else we get is a bonus."

Maravich, a surprise starter, brought back memories of his early NBA days, hitting 12 of 18 shots from a variety of angles. It was the seventh time in 19 games he found double figures for the Celtics and the first time he crossed the 30-point barrier since a game with Utah earlier this season.

In other games it was: New York Knicks 111 Atlanta Hawks 110; Cleveland Cavaliers 108 Detroit Pistons 107; San Antonio Spurs 100 Washington Bullets 94; Phoenix Suns 112 Kansas City Kings 109; Denver Nuggets 96 Utah Jazz 94; Chicago Bulls 115 San Diego Clippers 101; Los Angeles Lakers 113 Golden State Warriors 100; and Portland Trail Blazers 123 Milwaukee Bucks 122.

Toby Knight scored 33 points, including 11 in the final period, and Bill Cartwright added a stuff with 11 seconds left to lead New York over Atlanta.

The victory evened New York's record at 38-38, the best among the five teams battling for the final three playoff berths in the NBA Eastern Conference.

Cartwright finished with 21 points and grabbed 16 rebounds. Eddie Johnson led Atlanta with 26 points and Dan Roundfield scored 22.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar scored 23 points and Norm Nixon added 22 to pace Los Angeles over Golden State. The triumph gave the Lakers a three-game lead over the Seattle SuperSonics, idle Tuesday night, in the Pacific Division. Jamaal Wilkes had 17 points for Los Angeles, while Magic Johnson had 16.

Billy Ray Bates scored 12 points in the final 6:41 as Portland beat Milwaukee.

IOC is not impressed

GENEVA (AP) — The International Olympic Committee and the European Broadcasting Union reacted cooly Wednesday to plans for a post-Olympics international sports festival for athletes whose governments boycott the Moscow Games.

Hours after the end of a two-day, 12-nation meeting in Geneva to map out details of the plan, spokesmen for both organizations made plain they doubted the feasability of the idea. They were commenting on statements made at the close of the conference by the organizers.

The IOC spokesman said the figure of 50 goyernments that President Carter's special envoy, Lloyd Cutler, indicated had expressed support for a boycott either publicly or privately was most probably "bloated."

"We have no indication that a large number of countries, particularly in Europe, are interested in a boycott," he said.

Reacting to Cutler's claim at the final news conference that alternative games would not be harmful to the Olympic movement, the spokesman replied: "Any attempt to organize an event which constitutes competition to the Olympic Games could hardly be described as favorable."

Sports tonight

Sports fans will have a choice of taking in live action basketball in Victoria tonight or basketball and hockey on television.

Cuckoo Clock takes on DataTech at 9 in the second game of their best-of-three Senior "B" Men's Basketball League semi-final series at Central Junior High School.

Victoria Masters teams will play two exhibition basketball games in the Mt. Douglas High School gymnasium with the women playing the Mt. Doug girls at 7 and the men taking on the boys at 8:30.

There's more basketball on television with the National Invitational College Tournament championship game being shown on Channel 11 at 8.

Hockey buffs can watch Buffalo Sabres playing the Canucks in Vancouver, also at 8 on Channel 8.

Martin wins a pair to share third place

Times News Services

FREDERICTON, N.B.— Rinks from Edmonton and Winnipeg share the lead after seven rounds of play in the National Senior Women's curling championships here at Capital Winter Club, but the defending champions are close by, waiting for the leaders to falter.

Flora Martin's B.C. rink from Victoria won two games Tuesday to run its record to 4-2 and share third place while rinks skipped by Betty Jamison of Edmonton and Dorothy McKenzie of Winnipeg each have 5-1 records.

Martin downed Prince Edward Island 12-1 and Rita Proulx from Quebec City 10-4.

The McKenzie rink, runners-up for the last two years, won a pair of games, defeating Dorothy McGrory's St. John's, Nfld. rink 11-4 and Dorreene Wahl's Yukon, N.W.T. foursome 15-3.

Meanwhile, Jamison lost 10-2 to Saskatchewan's Betty Fairweather.

Host New Brunswick, skipped by Mildred Jones of Saint John, is also in contention and tied with B.C. at 4-2.

New Brunswick defeated Saskatchewan 7-5 and Elizabeth Macdonald's Charlottetown rink 9-8.

Prince Edward Island, which won its first four games, has lost three in a row and shares third spot with Saskatchewan with 4-3 marks.

Joan Dorothy Perry's Halifax rink beat Yukon 10-4 and Mary Ritchie's Guelph, Ont. foursome 13-7 to stand at 3-3.

St. John's is next at 2-4, followed by Ontario at 2-5, Quebec at 1-5 and Yukon at 1-6.

Canada, Sweden showdown bound

PERTH, Scotland (CP) — Two rinks stood out Tuesday at the women's world curling championships after a day of high scores and shortened games.

Unless big upsets occur, Canada and Sweden should meet in the key match of the round-robin series Thursday night. The top four rinks in the round-robin advance to the playoff round Saturday.

Canada, represented by Marj Mitchell of Regina, thumped the U.S. 12-3 in seven ends in the third draw and then beat France 10-1 over the same distance in the fourth draw.

Sweden needed only seven ends against Italy, winning 12-3, but was knocked off balance by Switzerland in the early going before coming back to win 12-4 in eight ends.

Sweden and Canada lead the competition with four victories and no defeats. Scotland holds third place after beating West Germany 10-4 in the fourth round. Norway, Switzerland, the U.S. and Italy each stand at 2-2, with France having one win and three losses, while West Germany and Denmark trail the field on four straight defeats.

In other fourth-draw games, the U.S. beat Demark 10-4 and Italy downed Norway 11-2 in eight ends. In the third draw, Scotland got by Norway 6-4, France beat Germany 8-4 and Switzerland beat Demark 10-8.

Canada and France traded singles on the first two ends but a beautiful shot by Mitchell on the third ousted France's shot rock and stayed to give Canada three.

French skip Paulette Sulpice blanked the fourth end unintentionally with a heavy draw shot and the roof fell in as Mitchell stole one in the fifth, two on the sixth and three on the seventh.

B.C. rink in first loss

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Winless teams struck back with a vengeance and leaders fell Tuesday in the Canadian mixed curling championship, leaving the Jim Dunstone rink of Winnipeg alone with an undefeated record.

Dunstone had a relatively easy time in the seventh draw when he took an early lead and held on to defeat John Fortier of Charlottetown 8-5. He barely squeaked past seventh-place Peter Murray of Saint John, N.B., 6-5 in the eighth draw as he stole three points in the eighth and ninth ends to move two points ahead, then gave up two in the 10th to tie it 5-5. Murray controlled the extra end, forcing Dunstone into a draw game that he won by an inch with his last shot.

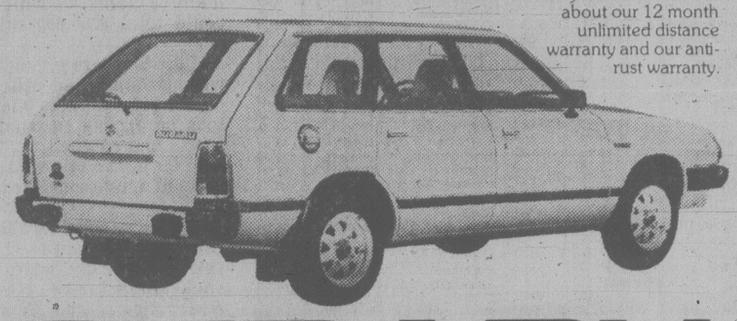

The home-town favorites, Toby MacDonald's St. John's rink, 4-2, spoiled the undefeated streak of B.C.'s Bob McCubbin of Richmond, 8-6. He then lost to Wayne Sokolosky of Calgary.

Dick Anderson of Sudbury, Ont., kept plugging away with an 8-4 win over Scott Saunders of Lunenburg, N.S., after a bye in the seventh to better his record to 4-2.

The draws left MacDonald and Anderson tied for fourth behind McCubbin and Fortier, both with 5-1 records, and Dunstone, who has won five straight.

Olympic hoop team plays here; coach rejects game with Vikes

Times News Services

Canada's Olympic men's basketball team apparently wants no part of University of Victoria Vikings.

Make that: the Canadian Olympic coach wants no truck with champions.

With the Olympic team scheduled to play here Monday against Athletes in Action as part of their pre-Olympic training program, national coach Jack Donohue was asked by UVic officials if he would care to meet the Vikings instead.

It was thought by UVic officials that it might be a better draw, the Vikes being recently crowned Canadian University basketball champions. And they might provide the Olympic team with an interesting evening.

It was also reported that AIA was willing to give way to the Vikings as it had three other games scheduled with the Olympic team.

But no deal. Donohue said no for whatever reason. And the game between the Olympic squad and AIA will go ahead as scheduled at the UVic gym.

The Olympic team has started training sessions at Ottawa in preparation for Olympic Games qualifying competition next month in Puerto Rico.

Other games between the teams will be March 25 in Vancouver, March 27 in Edmonton and March 28 at Calgary. All contests will be on university courts.

Athletes in Action is a religious group that makes its Canadian headquarters in Abbotsford.

Horse owners dig for profits

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Horse manure isn't usually a controversial subject at race tracks, but New Jersey horse breeders and owners are negotiating for a cut of the profits from manure sales — which could total $200,000 this year.

If the breeders get their way, grooms and other backstretch workers may soon be playing on tennis courts and baseball fields paid for by the sale of manure to mushroom farmers.

"There's considerable income from manure sales," says Les Unger, a spokesman for the New Jersey Sports and Exposition Authority, which operates the Meadowlands track in East Rutherford.

Unger said the track receives about $75,000 each year from the sales.

"It's not all profit though. It costs us a lot of money to clean it up" (from stalls and stables).

But manure is increasing in value and what was once a burden to tracks to have hauled away now is a new source of income.

"The price per yard load has increased dramatically," said John Hughes, treasurer of Freehold Raceway. "We get about $16,000 in revenue a year, but that's much lower than the going market rate because we signed a five-year contract."

All sides agree that the manure talks will probably result in improved recreational facilities for stable employees.

"This is definitely not a controversy," said Anthony T. Abbatiello, president of the state Standardbred Breeders and Owners Association. "We have a good relationship with the tracks, but one of our responsibilities as owners is the welfare of the grooms and stable help — to better their environment."

NFL takes action to control Raiders

OAKLAND (AP) — The National Football League has filed suit to take Oakland Raiders away from Al Davis and give them to a neutral party until the legal fight over the team's proposed move to Los Angeles is over.

The suit, filed late Monday in Alameda County Superior Court, is believed to be without precedent in sports and comes on the heels of a 22-to-0 vote by the NFL against allowing Davis to move his team south.

In addition to having the team taken over by a receivership, the NFL asked Judge Robert Kroninger to allow the temporary operators to sign a lease with the Oakland Coliseum for home games in 1980.

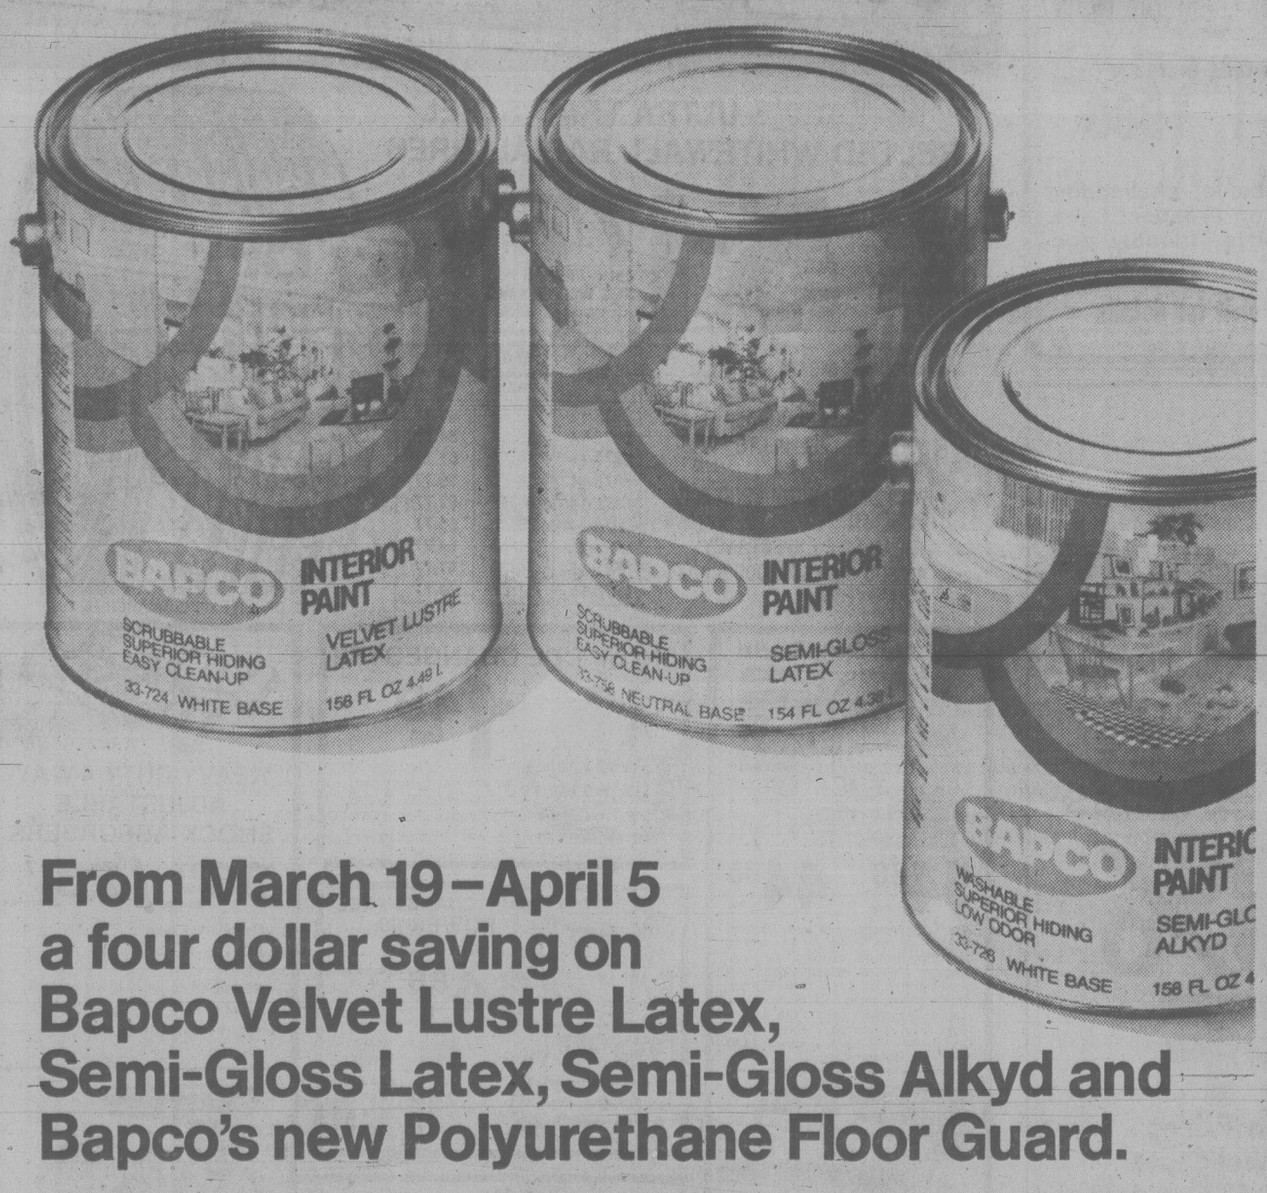

The motion to put the team in receivership was filed as part of a breach-of-contract suit against the Raiders by the league. A tentative hearing is set for March 28 in the case.

Whitecaps bringing new keeper, five starters

Vancouver Island Soccer League officials are talking already about a possible sellout at Royal Athletic Park Friday night as fans flock to get their first glimpse of the Vancouver Whitecaps' new goalkeeper David Harvey.

Harvey, from English first-division club Leeds United, was signed to replace Phil Parkes and saw his first action Tuesday night when the Whitecaps lost to Tampa Bay Rowdies 2-1 after a shootout in an exhibition game in Vancouver. The 'Caps edged the Rowdies in last season's Soccer Bowl game.

Parkes captured the imagination of the fans by topping the goals against average in the North American Soccer League for the second year in a row and so naturally there is a great deal of interest in his replacement.

Island officials say Harvey will be one of five definite starters when the Whitecaps play the Vancouver Island League Selects at Athletic Park at 7 p.m. Friday. The others definitely playing are the Whitecaps' new striker David Robb, signed from Philadelphia Fury, and last season's regulars Carl Valentine, Buzz Parsons and Victoria's Bob Bolitho.

Though the rest of the lineup hasn't been announced, what is certain is that the Whitecaps will be bringing over a strong team and not one made up of reserve players for the sixth annual Victoria Cup match. As Dave Unwin of the Island League points out:

"We embarrassed them by beating them 1-0 the second year we played and so they don't take us lightly any more!"

The Whitecaps have won on all the other occasions and are, of course, hot favorites to repeat on Friday night. But Island League officials are treating the game as an ideal opportunity to give all first-division clubs representation on the Select (rather than All Star) side and to provide several new young players with the chance to gain experience at this level of soccer.

Goalkeeper Jon Iruretagoyena of Gorge, defenders Lou Rowley of Oak Bay, Russ Rimmer of Cosmo Royals and Dan Van Gylswyk of Gorge, midfielder Ziggy Karl of Castaways and strikers Brian Gomez of Powell River, Brian Collis of Gorge and Bobby Young of Mestons are all on the Island lineup for the first time.

There are a few regulars well-known to the fans, however, included in the team that is coached by Bob English and managed by Brian Robinson. Ray Telford (Nanaimo), Steve Akam (Oak Bay), Gordie Horth and Dave Secco of UVic, Bobby Duncan and Frank Woods of Vic West and Kim Blank and Dave McCaig of Athletics round out the squad of 16.

Timbers buy pair

MANCHESTER, England (AP) — Manchester City of English soccer's First Division has announced it will sell striker Stuart Lee and defender Willie Donachie to Portland Timbers of the North American Soccer League.

Parkes signs for Sting

CHICAGO (AP) — Goaltender Phil Parkes has signed a multi-year contract with Chicago Sting of the North American Soccer League.

Chicago president Lee Stern did not reveal terms but said Parkes, 32, will become "one of the highest-paid goalkeepers in the NASL, if not the highest."

Parkes was purchased by the Sting from the Whitecaps last month.

Ambitious track and field program in Olympic plans

OTTAWA (CP) — The biggest hurdle facing the Canadian Track and Field Association as it prepares for the Moscow Olympics is the same one it faced prior to the Montreal Summer Games four years ago — money.

It has an ambitious series of training camps planned for the 60 to 70 athletes who hope to qualify for the Olympic team but association director Geoff Elliott doesn't yet know where the money will come from to pay for them.

Training camps in the U.S. this spring and a special three-week session in West Germany in July prior to the start of the Moscow Games will cost the association at least $120,000.

But it won't know how much support will be available from the federal government until April when 1980-81 spending plans are announced.

"We're at least 90 per cent dependent on government," Elliott said. Some money comes from a special foundation that collects private donations for the athletes.

While track and field produced only one medal in Montreal — Greg Joy's silver in the high jump — Elliott is optimistic of better results this time based on the eight medals Canadians won in last year's Pan-American Games in Puerto Rico and the 16 won at the Edmonton Commonwealth Games in 1978.

Joy, whose medal winning jump is still frequently seen on Canadian television, won't likely be on the Moscow team as he is still recovering from surgery to correct a persistent ankle problem.

Elliott has medal hopes for high jumper Debbie Brill of Vancouver who won her event at last year's world championships; shotputter Bishop Dolegiewicz of Toronto, a silver medalist at last year's Pan-Ams; Angela Taylor of Toronto, who set a record of 23.15 seconds for the women's world 200-metre indoor sprint earlier this year and penthalete Diane Konihowski of Edmonton, gold medalist in the Pan-Ams and Commonwealth Games.

Other possibilities are sprinter Desai Williams of Toronto, walker Marcel Jobin of Montreal, Scott Neilsen of New Westminster, who took the gold medal in the hammer throw at the Pan-Ams, javelin thrower Phil Olsen of Nanaimo and for one of the relay teams.

But notes Elliott: "Most of our medal winners never seem to be expected."

Sixteen athletes have already qualified for the Olympic team including Taylor, Brill, Konihowski, Williams, Jobin, Dolegiewicz, Olson and Neilsen.

The others are shotputter and discus thrower Carmen Ionesco of Montreal, runners Brian Saunders, Paul and John Craig, discus thrower Borys Chambul and high jumper Milt Ottey, all of Toronto, and discus thrower Bruno Pauletto of Vimont, Que.

The others must meet standards set by the COA in trials this summer to make the team. The standards, which Elliott isn't happy with, are designed by the association to make sure those selected have a reasonable chance on finishing among the top 16 entrants at Moscow.

The main selection will be made at Sherbrooke, Que., June 13-15 but there will be extra qualifying competitions a week later in Toronto and Winnipeg to help those who may have been hindered by poor weather conditions in Sherbrooke.

Before then a series of training camps are being arranged to start later this month or early in April.

In April, those in throwing competitions will be going to California to train. In May, sprinters, hurdlers and runners will assemble in Los Angeles for training and a series of local competitions.

Other athletes will go to Gainesville, Fla., and Tennessee for training.

City swimmers travel

Sixteen swimmers from two Greater Victoria clubs were scheduled to leave today for the Canadian Division II championships in Saskatoon.

Victoria Olympians will be represented by 14 competitors — Neil McKinlay, Jon Kelly, Brad Johnson, Chris Smith, Doug Smith, Bill Winram, Paul Cottingham, Lawrence Wright, Ron Wolfe, Shelly Cuppage, Linda Kimmons, Connie Schultz, Cheryl Grant and Bonnie Robertson.

Karen Coutts and Karen Rainey of Juan de Fuca Cohos also will make the trip.

Masters squads play at Mt. Doug

Victoria Masters men's and women's basketball teams, winners of gold medals at the recent B.C. Winter Games in Kimberley, will play the Mt. Douglas boys' and girls' squads in exhibition games tonight at Mt. Doug High School.

Women will play at 7 p.m. and the men at 8:30 and all proceeds will go toward the Lions Telethon.

PRESENTATION OF SCROLLS by British Columbia Sports Hall of Fame was made this week to City of Victoria in office of Mayor Bill Tindall by executive-director Peter Webster and executive-assistant Deirdre Hall of the Sports Hall. Also at brief ceremony were Jack Morgan, director of city's recreation and community services; city archivist Ainsley Helmcken and six members of 1945-46 Victoria Dominoes basketball team, which was undefeated in league and playoff games on way to national title. Scrolls recognize previous selection to honor roll at B.C. Sports Hall of Dominoes and Victoria Cougars, Stanley Cup hockey champions in 1925. In group (left to right) are Joe Bryant, Morgan, Hall, Webster, Tindall, Doug Peden, Alan Wright, George Andrews, George Straith, Helmcken and Art Chapman.

JASPER, Alta. (CP). — Peter Monod made it a clean sweep Tuesday by winning the Canadian Shell Cup slalom skiing final at Marmot Basin after a close battle with Michel Pratte of Noranda, Que.

Monod, a 22-year-old Albertan, had won his second giant slalom title Monday.

"I watched some of the other guys and I knew I would have to ski really hard today to win," said Monod, who placed first with a combined time of 86.82 seconds.

Lynn Lacasse of Montreal edged Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., by nine one-hundredths of a second to win the women's slalom championship.

Lacasse, 16, was second after the opening run and first in the second for a combined time of 91.42 seconds. Kreiner, the former Olympic gold medallist, was runner-up at 91.51.

Pratte, the first-run men's leader, was second over-all at 87.55 while Jim Kirby of Islington, Ont., was third at 87.67.

"I really made time at the bottom of the course in my second run," said Monod. "In the first, I got my poles tangled in front of me and it threw off my turns, but I managed to finish."

More than half of the 87-man field did not finish the race, including defending national slalom champ Raymond Pratte, Michel's brother, also of Noranda, and top contender Germain Barette of Causapscal, Que.

Lynda Robbins of Toronto was fourth in the women's at 91.69 and Ann Blackburn of Chicoutimi, Que., was fifth at 91.73. Robbins was the first-run leader but fell to third in the second.

Lacasse is the slalom leader in the eastern division of the Pontiac Cup series.

Twenty in the 43-competitor women's field did not finish the race. Among those who didn't finish was home-hill favorite Loni Klettl, who fell in her first run.

Baseball owners drop key proposal

NEW YORK (AP) — Negotiators for major league baseball team owners have unexpectedly dropped one of their key proposals in an attempt to reach contract peace with the players.

But there is some question how much effect Tuesday's withdrawal of the proposed salary scales will really have on the so-far-stalled talks.

"It's a little like you've been beating your wife and children for years," said Marvin Miller, executive director of the players' association. "Then you stop want a medal because you stopped."

A medal is not necessary, but Ray Grebey, chief negotiator for the owners, who would like a contract agreement and he said the movement in talks Tuesday set the stage for that.

The two sides held a 3½-hour meeting in Fort Lauderdale, the final negotiating session in Florida. The next meeting is Wed., March 26 in Scottsdale, Ariz.

"We feel it's enough of a development to provide a settlement," Grebey said.

But that may not be the view of the players. From the start, they have considered the free agent compensation proposal a more dangerous part of the owners' package than the salary scales.

After the scales proposal was withdrawn, the players indicated willingness to amend or withdraw some of their proposals. But that movement is predicated on the owners dropping their proposal on free agent compensation.

"We don't intend to do that," said Grebey. "We intend to bargain on it."

The owners' plan contains a formula setting compensation based on the number of teams selecting a free agent. A team signing a player selected in the re-entry draft by more than eight teams would protect 15 players and then allow the club losing the free agent to receive an amateur draft pick, plus a major or minor league player unprotected.

The players fear any compensation would restrict the free agent market and limit movement, creating a situation as in the National Football League where free agents rarely move from team to team.

"We have never said from day one of these talks that our proposals are letter perfect and must go unchanged," Grebey said. "Both parties have an obligation to bargain what's on the table."

Among the players sitting in on the negotiations were Reggie Jackson of New York Yankees, Doug DeCinces and Mark Belanger of Baltimore Orioles, Jon Matlack and Jim Kern of Texas Rangers and Gene Garber of Atlanta Braves.

Earlier Tuesday, management went public with its case for the first time, detailing the proposals made to the players.

Included were increases in pensions that would pay a five-year player at age 45 benefits of $5,580 a year to $21,408 for 10-year players at age 55, and finally $50,000 annually to a 20-year man at age 65.

Other proposals which the owners said added to a total of $26 million more than in the expired contract were life insurance benefits boosted from $50,000 to $250,000 and major medical payments from $100,000 to $250,000.

Church sex report defended

TORONTO (CP) — The United Church of Canada has no business telling people whether it is right or wrong to have sex before marriage, says the author of a church study of sexual ethics.

Rev. Robin Smith, head of the church's study group on sexuality, says he is afraid the report might be dynamite, but he intends to present it to the church's general council next August.

The report also says homosexuals can be ordained and that masturbation and sexual fantasies are a normal part of human sexuality as long as they do not become a preoccupation.

United Church officials do not want the contents of the report released before the 500 delegates to the assembly receive it in June, but Smith has been authorized to speak about it.

The report was commissioned because a previous general council was concerned about teenage pregnancy and the increasing incidence of venereal disease, Smith said.

As soon as the report was started the study group realized it was faced with the problem of matching modern sexual research with traditional Biblical teachings.

He said the United Church must ask itself if it is legitimate for people involved in honest and caring relationships to have sex before marriage.

The church should stress an honest and strong intention to faithfulness within marriage, the report says, rather than being overanxious about total sexual exclusivity.

The church and society have also treated separated, divorced and widowed people as though they were single without any sex life, Smith said.

"We say that's unfair," he said. "That we have to recognize that they have sexual needs and that it's understandable and right that they do."

Ethical questions must be seen in their contexts — which does not mean the commands against fornication and adultery should be taken lightly, Smith said.

The report, entitled In God's Image — Male and Female, urges the church to accept the position that homosexuals are homosexuals by nature, and therefore should not be condemned for their behavior.

Since sexual orientation is not a criterion for ordination in the United Church, Smith said "there is no reason, in principle, why mature, self-accepting homosexuals should not be ordained."

Hero diplomat sees more Iran violence

TORONTO (CP) — Kenneth Taylor, the Canadian ambassador who helped six Americans escape from Iran, says there is a possibility of future violence in Iran.

During the taping of a CBC-TV program to be aired Friday morning and in an interview later, Taylor said that although Iran is "beginning to pull itself together," it is in a state of cultural and political transition.

The 45-year-old ambassador, appearing on the children's newsmagazine program, What's New, admitted there are some details about the escape of the six Americans that may never be told because they fall under the Official Secrets Act.

Taylor said he is optimistic for the future of the remaining 50 U.S. hostages because he believes the new Iranian government of Bani Sadr wants a speedy resolution to the crisis.

Taylor said he would like a foreign post or a job in Ottawa. He said there have been rumors that he might be appointed Canadian ambassador to the U.S. but the government has not asked him about it.

Taylor has become a celebrity since the six diplomats were spirited to freedom in January and his new status has affected his personal life.

"There's an element of fun to it," he said. "Maybe after a long day I feel like a tired hero. There are certain responsibilities as a Canadian to respond to the recognition I have received. I don't think anyone anticipated the American response."

Taylor also said the Western press assumed the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan would force Iran to come to terms with the U.S.

But that has not happened and Iran has tabled its own protest to the Soviet Union regarding the invasion, Taylor said.

Taylor said he had expected Iran to react angrily to Canada's harboring of the U.S. citizens but would not hold it against Canada in the long term.

Taylor told program host David Schatzky and two Toronto students that as ambassador to Iran he was responsible for protecting Canadians, helping Canadian businessmen sell their products and for reporting on political events that might have implications for Canada.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ENERGY COMMISSION

NOTICE OF HEARING

TAKE NOTICE, that the British Columbia Energy Commission has set for hearing on Tuesday, April 22, 1980, at the hour of 9 o'clock in the forenoon, or as soon thereafter as may be convenient, an application by Cominco Ltd. ("Cominco"), for an Order under Section 105(3) of the Energy Act exempting Cominco, and its hydro-electric plants, equipment and facilities from the application of the Energy Act, which exemption Order is subject to the prior approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

An Agreement which is the basis of an application for a Certificate of Public Convenience and Necessity by West Kootenay Power and Light Company, Limited dated January 3, 1980 is contingent upon the Order sought by Cominco being granted.

The effect of the Order, if granted without conditions and approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, will be that the powers vested in the Commission to regulate Cominco Ltd. and its hydro-electric plants, equipment and facilities under the Energy Act will be suspended during the term of the Order.

Persons intending to be present and participate in the public hearing should give notice of intention to do so in writing addressed to Mr. D. Leach, Secretary, and a copy to the Applicant on or before Tuesday, April 1, 1980.

Interested parties may obtain a copy of the Application from:

P. A. Manson, General Counsel,
Cominco Ltd.,
200 Granville Street,
Vancouver, British Columbia

Opening lead — queen of diamonds.

If you toss a coin, it is even money it will not come down heads. If you toss two coins, the odds are 3 to 1 they will not both be heads. (Toss three coins and the odds become 7 to 1.)

It is not important to understand how probabilities of this sort are determined, but it is important to realize that bridge leans heavily on probabilities. A player who understands and sticks to percentages will do very well over the long haul.

Consider this deal where South took the diamond lead with the king and led a low trump to dummy's jack. East won with the ace and returned a diamond, taken by declarer with the ace. After playing the king of trumps, South led a heart to the queen, which lost to East's king. Back came a diamond to West's ten and the contract went down one when West cashed the ace of clubs.

South did not give himself the best chance for the contract. Instead of leading a trump at trick two, he should have finessed the queen of hearts. True, the queen would lose to the king and East would return a diamond, but even so South would make four spades. He takes the diamond return with the ace and finesses the ten of hearts. After the ten wins, declarer discards his diamond loser on the ace of hearts and eventually scores ten tricks.

In effect, declarer based all his hopes on the 50 per cent chance that West had the king of hearts. But if South had finessed the heart queen at trick two, planning to finesse the ten later if the queen lost to the king, he would have had two chances for the contract instead of only one.

This would have given him about a 3-to-1 chance of success, a situation similar to the toss of two coins.

Petro-Can to have logo soon

CALGARY (CP) — Petro-Canada will have its own logo on its own credit cards in Western Canada within a year.

The government-owned oil company's logo, to be chosen this week, will initially be displayed at the company's retail outlets and at places of high public exposure, a company spokesman said. It will also be carried on the credit cards and on all Petro-Canada's products and tanker trucks.

The final selection of the logo will be made from three color schemes and two logotypes designed by the Bermuda-based affiliate of the New York agency of Lippincott and Margulies Inc., whose clients have included the Royal Bank of Canada, CP Rail and CP Air.

The multi-colored, stylized service-station signs will identify some of the prime retail outlets Petro-Canada acquired in the western provinces when it bought Pacific Petroleums Ltd. of Calgary for $1.7 billion in the summer of 1978.

All plans to give Petro-Canada a distinctive identity were halted when the Conservatives won the election last May and announced plans to turn the federal company over to the private sector.

But the return of the Liberals to power on Feb. 18 re-established the company as a national entity and spurred the creation of the logo.

The 400 retail outlets are all located in the four western provinces but the company may extend into Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes if it can acquire outlets and transportation and distribution facilites in the east.

The credit cards may also be distributed thoughout Canada if the company can conclude an exchange arrangement with a private coast-to-coast oil company.

Bribe charges laid

MONTREAL (CP) — Twenty-six liquor companies were arraigned Tuesday on charges of passing bribes ranging from $1,348 to $208,628 and totalling almost 1.2 million, to officials of the Quebec Liquor Corp.

The companies, including such well-known names as Joseph Seagram, Corby and John de Kuyper, were not required to enter a plea. But lawyers, appearing on their behalf in sessions court, formally denied guilt in choosing trial by judge and jury.

The alleged criminal offences took place between 1962 and 1977, the bulk of them under provincial Liberal and Union Nationale governments, and many involve the Quebec liquor board, predecessor of the corporation, which was created in 1973.

Parlors rub wrong way?

WINNIPEG (CP) — What do body rub parlors and the Marxist-Leninist party have in common? Besides, perhaps, rubbing some people the wrong way, they are now both objects of legal proceedings under the city's poster and handbill bylaw.

Police are proceeding against the parlors "left, right and centre" under the bylaw, said Sgt. Dan Jones of the Winnipeg Police Department.

Jones said the proceedings against the parlors, studios, and emporia, are taking place while the courts rule on the legality of a new city bylaw designed to regulate them.

Bylaw court has previously heard charges under the poster and handbill bylaw only against extreme leftist political parties, to curb proliferation of posters saying "Make the Rich Pay," and "Punish the Police Criminals."

But Jones said in an interview that the police have received so many complaints from hotel operators concerning advertising by massage parlors and dating and escort services, that 20 charges were laid in the past week.

In a statement of claim filed last week lawyer John Scurfield asked the courts to declare the new regulatory bylaw invalid on the grounds that the city enacted "oppressive regulations designed to eliminate or prohibit the carrying on of lawful businesses."

The bylaw calls for licence fees to rise from $250 to $3,000, parlors to close by midnight, and keep a registry of clients' names, addresses, type of service performed, and fee paid.

City solicitor Frank Steele said a statement of defence will be filed within two weeks.

More family breakdowns in Sask.

SASKATOON (CP) — There is an epidemic of marriage and family breakdown in Saskatchewan, says the executive-director of the Saskatoon Family Service Bureau.

Ted Cardwell said groups like his need more funding to alleviate the problem.

He said the Saskatoon office handled 1,100 cases last year, well above the national average for an agency its size.

Calgary cultist waited in vain

CALGARY (CP) — Shelley Bellaviti was waiting for a miracle from God, but it didn't come.

The 28-year-old mother of three, a member of the Children of God cult, died in hospital Sunday after refusing treatment for cancer.

Doctors said chemotherapy treatments could have added years to her life or even cured her, but Mrs. Bellaviti preferred to wait for God to heal her.

Her husband, Mario, said he didn't regret the couple's decision to accept nothing but painkillers from hospital staff, "even though it looks like God failed us."

Mrs. Bellaviti, who joined the Children of God 10 years ago, entered hospital five days before her death.

The sect gained international prominence after allegations that members engaged in prostitution to raise money and attract new members.

Flood control program 'waste'

WINNIPEG (CP) — A new federal-provincial program to reduce flood damage in Winnipeg is a "waste of time and money," says the director of the Red River Valley International Citizens Flood Control Coalition.

Taras Lasko made the comment at a public meeting held to explain the program which restricts development near the Red, Assininboine, and Seine rivers.

The program came into effect Feb. 15.

"This is not the way to solve the problem," Lasko said. "People should be allowed to build where they like."

"The government should be looking at ways of stopping the flooding. That's where the problem is."

Ness Mudry, planning director for Manitoba's natural resources department, defended the program.

Jail, not jobs

CALGARY (CP) — Young people from Victoria, B.C. to Corner Brook, Nfld., are flooding into Calgary looking for a fast buck and are finding jail records instead, say city police.

They estimate about 85 per cent of the people arrested here since last summer are recent arrivals in Boomtown.

Most are in their late teens or early 20's and have lived in the city only a few months.

High-rise beef

CALGARY (CP) — All that's high-rise isn't luxury, as tenants in Roxboro House, Calgary's most "luxurious" condominium have found out.

Residents have paid $150,000 to $250,000 for suites with fireplaces that back up, air conditioners that malfunction and mice. They have blamed the builders but some blame has come back on the "stubborn" and "influential" tenants themselves.

"They spent money on the exterior, then chintzed like hell on the inside," said one, who declined to have his name used.

Second look

VIRDEN, Man. (CP) — The Fort la Bosse School Board has agreed to consider a moratorium on the closing of senior grades at Elkhorn Collegiate, board chairman Bob Cowie said Monday.

The board has proposed that grades 10 to 12 be eliminated next fall and the 31 students be bused 25 kilometres to school here.

Parents in Elkhorn, Sinclair and Kola kept their children home from school for the last week to protest the proposed closing. All but 234 Elkhorn children now have returned to classes.

Osler Award

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Winnipeg psychiatrist has been awarded the 1980 Canadian Medical Association's Osler Scholarship.

Dr. Pierre Leichner, director of post graduate education and assistant professor of psychiatry at the University of Manitoba, said he will use the $2,000 award to pursue studies and research in medical education.

The award, established in 1929, is given annually.

Hearing opens in stock fiddle

CALGARY (CP) — A three-week preliminary hearing opened here this week for a Vancouver-based brokerage firm and eight persons charged with conspiracy in manipulating a stock on the Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Bond Street International Securities Ltd., Ann Mark of Vancouver, Leslie Michael Hart of Vancouver and Joseph John Custock Jr. of Calgary are charged with arbitrarily setting the buying and selling prices of shares of Thor Explorations Ltd. between Sept. 1 and Nov. 30, 1977.

When the charge was laid in August, 1978, Hart was president of Bond Street and Mark was chairman of the board. Mark also was a former president of Thor, a company with uranium holdings and other interests in northern Saskatchewan.

Skipper denies ramming

A 53-year-old Richmond fisherman told a county court jury Tuesday he didn't repeatedly ram another boat and didn't brandish a rifle during an incident Aug. 20, 1978, in Juan de Fuca Strait near Race Rocks.

Vinko Nickola Sladich, owner of the 37-foot gilnetter DM, said he was waiting for his place in a lineup of salmon boats and had thrown about 100 feet of net into the sea when he noticed another boat approaching.

He said he put the gear into neutral so his net wouldn't get into the propeller. When the other boat was very close, he jumped into the wheelhouse but the two vessels had collided and he tried to push the boats apart because he didn't want their rubbing action against each other to cause damage.

The whole incident took no more than a few minutes. The other boat went forward and he stayed in place.

Sladich said he had a rifle on board but it was in a storage space and he never took it out that day.

He said there was only one bumping incident between the boats and he was more surprised than angry.

His wife, Amka, said she was resting when suddenly there was a bump. She got up and saw Sladich at the stern throwing the net and she turned the engine off because the boats were side-by-side and she didn't want any more friction between them.

Sladich tried to push the other boat away and it left and nothing else happened, she said.

She said Sladich was mad, but not that mad, because of the collision and their boat was quite new. She never saw a rifle.

She also said Sladich didn't swear.

Rudy Kirmhse of Deep Cove, skipper of the 56-foot dragger Nopsa, said his net was at 80 fathoms and the crew was doing its last run before heading home with 50,000 pounds of fish kept in refrigerated seawater.

Gilnetters were getting ready for the opening of salmon fishing and two boats ahead were setting their gear but there was half a mile between them.

Then he saw the DM come from his left across his bow, swing around and stop, about a quarter mile away. Kirmhse assumed the other boat was going to let him go by but he altered course because the boat didn't seem to make any effort to move.

Eventually, the two boats touched bow-to-bow "very gently."

"Then the guy just seemed to blow his top," Kirmhse said of Sladich.

"He started screaming 'you son of a bitch I kill you.' "

Kirmhse said Sladich backed his boat up and then drove it full ahead into the side of the Nopsa, riding up on her side. He backed off, struck him again, and then did it a third time.

"The whole thing didn't make any sense," he said.

A crewman on the Nopsa yelled that Sladich had a gun. Kirmhse said he couldn't see Sladich loading a gun but his motions looked like shells were being put in and he saw the gun being pointed into the Nopsa's wheelhouse window but he could not see who was holding it.

Kirmhse said there were three separate areas of damage to the side of Nopsa. He said his boat was not very manoeuvrable when dragging and the DM was not fishing at the time because he could see the net on the drum.

The case was to go to the jury today after summations by Crown counsel Wayne Smith and defence lawyer Dean Wilson and Judge Leslie Cashman's address.

Driver jailed for six months

A 27-year-old man was sentenced in county court Tuesday by Judge Frederick Melvin to six months in jail after pleading guilty to dangerous driving Nov. 8, 1978, on the Trans-Canada Highway at Portage Inlet.

Court was told Jack Wayne Hollinger overtook a car in a no-passing zone during highway construction and struck an oncoming car.

Hollinger has a driving record including three speeding convictions, one carless driving and one driving while under suspension and a number of criminal convictions including three common assaults and assault causing bodily harm.

OLI magazine to aid viewers of Odyssey series

A magazine aimed at adding depth and clarity to a 12-week public broadcasting series on mankind is being published by the B.C. Open Learning Institute.

Odyssey Viewer's Magazine is a 65-page collection of 25 articles written by anthropologists and archeologists, supplemented by more than 90 photographs, maps and drawings.

Dr. John Ellis, principal of OLI in Richmond, said the magazine will give viewers additional insight into the series and human heritage.

It can be obtained for $1.50 from, Continuing Education, Open Learning Institute, Box 94000, Richmond, B.C. V6Y 2A2.

The Odyssey series begins April 6 at 8 p.m. on Channel 9. It is produced by Michael Ambrosino, whose research covers two years in consultation with some of the world's eminent anthropologists and archeologists, nine of them serving on his production committee.

Odyssey's programs deal with such topics as the African bushman, Pueblos in the Chaco Canyon of New Mexico, Masai women in Kenya, Quebec's Crees, and the Inca empire of Peru; from south of the equator to the Arctic, to the wreck of a Spanish galleon off Ireland.

The series is supported by the National Endowment for the Humanities, whose chairman Joseph Duffy said millions of viewers will be helped to understand the simiiarities and differences of peoples and how their languages and cultural influences shape the lives and values of North Americans.

Before the judge

A federal prison inmate was charged in provincial court Tuesday with the first-degree murder of a fellow prisoner on Sunday.

Michael Thomas Leslie, 35, was charged in the stabbing death of 52-year-old William Engel, who was serving a life sentence at William Head penitentiary for non-capital murder.

Leslie, serving a 30-month term imposed for possession of stolen property, was remanded by Judge Lorne Pearce until next Tuesday for possible fixing of a preliminary hearing date.

Colwood RCMP said Engel was involved in a fight at the medium-security prison about 4:30 p.m. and was taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital where he died five hours later.

David Edward Lindsay, 1225 Eppingham, was remanded until next Wednesday for election of his trial method on the first charge and plea on the second count.

Another 24-year-old, Michael Leslie Smith, was charged with attempted robbery with violence following an incident Tuesday morning at the Douglas Hotel, 1450 Douglas.

Smith, who was also charged with possession of a knife dangerous to the public peace, was released on his own undertaking and remanded to next Wednesday for election.

Judge Pearce ordered Smith to obey a 10 p.m. curfew during his release.

Pearce imposed a total of 21 days in jail to a 30-year-old man who pleaded guilty to impaired driving and failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

James Walker Sherrin, 3717 Harriet, was given 14 days on the drinking-driving charge and a further seven days on the second count.

Crown counsel Robert Mullligan said Sherrin was involved in a minor accident at 680 Marlissa last Thursday when he backed into a parked car. He left the scene but was picked up 15 minutes later when his car ran into a ditch on the Trans-Canada Highway near Thetis Lake.

Sherrin had two previous convictions for impaired driving and one for failing to remain.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Joseph William Ellis, 40, of 3757 First, $600; and Edward Arthur Budden, 36, of 334 Michigan, $50.

In addition, Budden was ordered to perform 60 hours of community service work.

No impropriety, judge tells lawyer

Judge Lorne Pearce, criticized in provincial court last Thursday by a prosecutor, said Tuesday he committed no impropriety in not setting a default period in sentencing a Calgary lawyer for refusing a breath test demand.

Pearce's remarks were in response to Crown counsel Don Laughton's statement following a $450 fine levied against 34-year-old Bryan Francis Hagel.

Pearce had said that because of Hagel's profession, it was not necessary to impose a period of time in jail should the fine not be paid.

Laughton said he had never heard of sentences imposed without default periods and asked Pearce to note the objection in the court record.

But Pearce said Tuesday B.C. Court of Appeal decisions have held that the court should consider a person's likelihood and ability to pay when imposing fines and periods of default.

"Therefore," Pearce said, "It was no impropriety the other day."

One more charged after drug raid

One more name was added Tuesday to the list of persons charged in connection with the major drug raid last Thursday by RCMP and Greater Victoria police forces, making the total 29 with six more warrants for arrests outstanding.

Alwin Curt Hartman, 707 Esquimalt, was charged in provincial court with trafficking in cocaine Jan. 22 and remanded in custody.

Murder verdict inconclusive

VANCOUVER (CP) — After seven weeks of testimony and arguments and six days of deliberations, the murder trial of eight B.C. Penitentiary prisoners ended inconclusively Tuesday with two men walking free on not-guilty verdicts and five others ordered into continued custody for retrial.

The eighth accused was found not guilty but was returned to prison on the indeterminate sentence he is serving as an habitual criminal.

The eight were charged with the April 27 beating death of fellow prisoner David Sidney McDonald, 40, who was serving time for the theft of $100,000 from the armored car company he worked for.

Earlier in the trial, one of the accused, Richard William McWhinney, threatened a guard as he stepped down from the witness stand. He punched a deputy sherriff during a morning break in the trial, assaulted a doctor appointed to look after the medical needs of the prisoners and shouted obscenities.

The jury, which was sequestered last week following telephoned death threats to three of its members, was unable to reach a verdict on McWhinney, Michael Joseph Newman, Robert Charles Smith, Archie Beck and Allan Robert MacLeod. It acquitted Gary Lee Penner, Donald Robson and George Gallichon.

Fifth rape centre

DUNCAN — B.C.'s fifth facility for assisting rape victims has been opened here.

The small temporary office of the Cowichan Rape Assault Centre is behind the medical health centre on Gibbins Road, opposite Cowichan District Hospital.

Twelve volunteers have already joined the group and six have begun counselling victims of sexual assault and rape.

Group member Jan Meadows said they hope to receive funding from private sources and from the ministries of the attorney-general, human resources and health.

Meadows hopes the Duncan unit will join the province's other four groups in the B.C. Coalition of Rape Centres when it is fully operational.

curls... curls... curls!

As fashion becomes softer, more fluid, hair naturally follows suit. Tired of stark, geometric lines, women are once again seeking strictly feminine hairstyles. Consequently, curls are bigger than ever. And these aren't just clustered in the perimeter — they're all-over-the-head curls. Some are tight, crazy curls; others are looser for a tousled effect. Even cut short, hair today demands the soft and lazy movement of curls and waves.

Whatever hair style you prefer, there is a MARGO Perm just right for you. Make your appointment today and be ready for your favourite spring time activities.

Will the poor of the world drag down the wealthy?

By MIKE HUGHES

There is a growing awareness that there are no rich and poor countries in the world any more but rather rich and poor sections of one economic system.

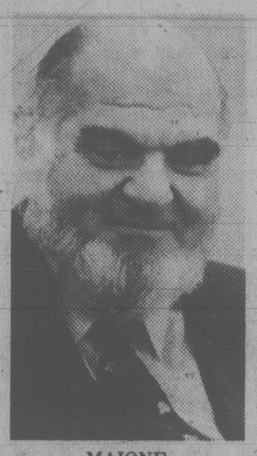

That's the opinion of Romeo Maione who, for the past five years, has served as a director of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

He has a long list of credentials in the fields of labor and international affairs, having served both as assistant director (1963-66) and then director of the international affairs department of the Canadian Labor Congress (1972-74).

His ties with the union movement began in Montreal in the 1940s when he was a member of the machinists' union working in various industrial plants.

He became involved with the Canadian Young Christian Workers in 1953 and served as international president of the YCW for four years beginning in 1957.

Maione was in Victoria Monday at the invitation of the Victoria International Development Educational Association and spoke to a group Monday night on Canadian Labor and the Third World.

MAIONE
. . . economic syndrome

In an interview he said there is a shift away from the feeling that rich countries only make charitable donations to the poor countries from what they consider surplus to their needs.

"There is a movement away from what I call the charitable syndrome to the economic syndrome," he explained.

The emphasis now is on the fact that the international economic system functions as a whole and if some of the parts are in trouble the whole thing suffers.

"Unless we can solve the poor sections' problems they are going to bring down the whole thing."

He says the latest estimate is that poor countries like India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Tanzania, Uganda and Zaire owe the rich countries $300 billion, half of that amount to private banks.

"If these countries get even poorer and can't pay that money back nobody knows what will happen to the system."

The message to the rich countries then is "this is your international economic system. If it doesn't work both of us are going to go down."

One of the major problems Canadian trade unions have to wrestle with, as does the country as a whole, is whether to adopt a protectionist or expansionist policy when it comes to foreign aid, Maione said.

Some unions are opposed to assisting other countries develop industries which are going to compete with their Canadian employers.

The textile and boot industries are the ones likely to develop in the poor countries, Maione said, and these would be a threat to eight to 10 per cent of the work force in Ontario and Quebec.

"So there are serious economic repercussions."

What is needed is a national policy which allows Canada to move away from those industries to more advanced, technological ones such as in the field of electronics.

Countries like Sweden have done this, bringing in new machinery and retraining their workers in order to avoid competing with the poor countries.

The important thing is that this shift be done not at the expense of the working person but provide opportunities for retraining in a more advanced kind of work with better wages, Maione said.

For the past five years, he has worked as director of the non-governmental organizations section of CIDA.

He said Canadians have the mistaken impression that overseas aid takes the form of big bags of money being taken out of the country and dumped in some less fortunate area.

That is not the way it works, he said. Very few dollars actually go directly to the poor countries.

What happens is CIDA purchases Canadian products and donates them to these countries so that they can improve themselves.

So there is an element of self-interest in the exercise, Maione said, as CIDA's purchase of things like farm equipment creates jobs in Canada.

He's big at thinking small

By AB KENT

In Nathan Isgur's line of work it pays to think small.

So small, in fact, that his work is theoretical — but nonetheless important.

Dr. Isgur, of the University of Toronto, is a high-energy nuclear physicist, one of a handful of Canadian scientists who are concerned about the ultimate nature of matter.

Their quest is the smallest particle making up all things in the universe.

To date they have no microscope powerful enough to prove recent theories outlined by Isgur in a lecture at the University of Victoria.

And Canadian scientists hope to do something about that, says Isgur.

More than 100 students, professors and others showed up to hear him outline recent work in the field of interacting elementary particles.

Prof. Harry Sullivan of UVic's physics department, introduced Isgur as one of few physicists who understand how subatomic particles of matter may relate to each other.

Isgur's reputation — despite an entertaining, roundly-applauded delivery — remained largely unblemished after the lecture.

Isgur said it is possible theoretical nuclear physicists have isolated the elementary constituents of matter.

With powerful electron microscopes they have been able to peer inside atomic nuclei.

The SLAC microscope in California is two miles long and positioned horizontally to allow very high intensity electron beams to accelerate to frequencies where researchers can see some of the larger of the particles of matter.

Isgur said Canada's particle physicists are trying to persuade government to put up funding for what could be the world's most powerful microscope so scientists can prove their endeavors.

A huge particle accelerator, the Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory, has been built at a cost of $1 billion 60 miles north of Chicago.

The Canadians would like to build an adjunct project in co-operation with the Americans, Isgur said.

But a major obstacle to the proposal is its cost, which he estimates would be in the tens of millions.

City's $1M profit earmarked for land

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A million-dollar profit this year from the sale of city-owned lands will be used to buy more land for housing developments if Ald. Bill McElroy gets his way.

He said Tuesday he has a consensus from a majority of his colleagues to use the profits from three parcels of land as a housing fund, and not to hold the lid on or reduce the general mill rate.

The land use planning committee voted to accept bids totalling $388,269 for 11 lots in the Mt. Stephen-Ryan Street area and $32,000 for a small triangular lot at Ross and Robertson in Fairfield.

One single-family lot remains in the first group of properties and it will be offered again at an upset price of $32,000.

The comittee also discussed the Godfeldt property in Victoria West, which is to be subdivided and offered as duplex lots, or possibly higher density.

McElroy said this should bring in another $250,000 while the Rainbow site at the south foot of Russell Street in Vic West — the city has approved a townhouse development and a park for the three acres — should produce about $400,000.

All the money should stay in the tax sale reserve fund and used only for possible future civic land purchases for housing, McElroy said in an interview.

There are few publicly-owned parcels left, the alderman added, and property would have to be bought from the private sector.

McElroy specifically mentioned undeveloped properties on View Street between Blanshard and Cook, which has been earmarked by city planners for high-density residential projects as part of the Harris Green development permit area.

With the sale of the Mt. Stephen properties, the city retains the right to buy back the lots at the sale price if the purchaser has not substantially completed his house within 12 months.

On the Godfeldt property at the north end of Catherine Street, McElroy tried to get the committee to endorse his recommendations for subdivision into five or six lots with zoning no higher than R-2 duplex, and the rentention of the existing heritage house.

But aldermen voted to refer his report to the planning department for a more detailed study, in co-operation with the Vic West Community Development Association.

A delegation of residents spoke before the committee in opposition to a major housing project with townhouses. The consensus in the neighborhood is that it should be a "heritage style" residential park, where threatened historic houses could be moved.

Theatre wins concessions

The architect for the new Capitol theatre at Blanshard and Yates wrestled with city planners and council's land use planning committee Tuesday and came away with some concessions.

Daryl Jorgenson, who designed the $4 million project housing six theatres with a total of 2,000 seats plus retail shops, objected to chief planner Geoff Greenhalgh's request for a 2½-metre setback on the Blanshard and View street sides of the block-long building.

This would accommodate automobile drop-off bays out of regular traffic and the proposed View Street mall, which will narrow the traffic lanes and widen the sidewalks.

The architect said the sidewalk on Blanshard now is five metres wide, and his client, Famous Players Ltd., had already made some concessions on the design of the building.

To provide a further setback would cost 75 theatre seats and 3,000 square feet of retail space.

"A big bundle of money," he said.

Ald. Bill McElroy said if the company had not come forward with such a sympathetic design — a brick and glass structure on Blanshard from Yates to View — he would have demanded every concession possible.

"It's a lovely looking building," he admitted, and therefore he was willing to accommodate the company.

The committee approved Famous Players' development permit application, with no firm requirements for setbacks.

But they attached a rider that the company provide such setbacks at sidewalk level as may be negotiated with the city engineer by mutual consent.

Jorgenson said after the meeting that working drawings are in preparation and construction of the new Capitol 6 should start in August. It will open in the summer of 1981.

The present Capitol theatre opened in 1921, the last in a national chain of Capitol theatres built by Famous Players.

Block the mall change bid fails

Downtown businessmen Tuesday made a renewed effort to block the start of a limited traffic ban on the Government Street mall in downtown Victoria.

Starting this spring, only buses will be permitted to enter the mall at the south end by Humboldt Street, although cars will still have access to the mall via the side streets farther north.

Pip Holmes, president of the Downtown Victoria Association, said that downtown is already bad for drivers.

"We say the people who shop downtown are quite enough confused with existing traffic patterns. Don't change them."

Merchants also object to the ban on southbound Wharf Street traffic turning east on to Humboldt to go past the Empress Hotel, Holmes said. Drivers will have to detour down to the Legislative Buildings to get back around to where they now may drive directly.

The partial mall on Government has also proved successful, Holmes said. It's now a high demand retail shopping area.

"Don't play around with success," he said.

He attempted to have the central business district advisory committee pass a motion against the plan, but it was defeated 4-3 with Mayor Bill Tindall casting the deciding vote.

Former mayor Mike Young, who is a member of the committee, disagreed with Holmes.

"Nothing ventured, nothing gained," he said.

"The vitality of Government Street has been improved over the years and we should at least give this idea a trial run."

A substitute resolution which informs city council that there is serious opposition to the scheme was passed instead.

Housing bulletin board

Victoria will do its bit to ease the housing shortage with a public bulletin board in the lobby of city hall where tenants and landlords can get together.

It's Ald. Bill McElroy's idea and council's land management and housing development committee endorsed it unanimously.

"I strongly feel that at a time when the vacancy rates are so low, that this is a way in which the city can help, without cost to the taxpayers," he said in a memo to aldermen.

Hansen move protest backed

Members of the Juan de Fuca Recreation Commission Tuesday protested former member Paul Hansen's abrupt removal from the commission.

Bill Mathews, who holds his seat on the commission in his role as "mayor" of Belmont Park and is not appointed by a regional director, said commission members are appointed for two-year terms and cannot be removed in mid-term.

Mathews' call for a vote of confidence in Hansen's performance on the commission was endorsed.

The only member not supporting the motion was Langford director Ed Lubick who had dropped Hansen from the commission because he said he hadn't attended enough meetings.

Hansen was entering the second year of his second term on the commission when Lubick recommended the termination. Lubick recommended he be replaced by Langford fire chief Al Le Quesne.

LUBICK

Rec centre bus stop okayed

The Juan de Fuca Recreation Commission tentatively agreed Tuesday to an Urban Transit Authority proposal to use the centre as the main transit exchange in the Western Community.

UTA representatives presented to the commission the basic concept that has been developed for increasing services in the community and showed how part of the centre's large parking lot would be used.

Transit planner Dennis Grimmer said a transit bay where buses would pull in to wait for other buses would be constructed close to the side entrance of the ice arena.

The transit plan for the community is mainly designed as a feeder system. Buses would circulate in Sooke, Metchosin, Colwood and Langford collecting passengers who would then be taken to the transfer point to board city-bound buses.

Grimmer said this would mean about six to eight buses would use the transit exchange at the centre each half hour.

The centre is already an unoffical transit point in the community because a number of people drive their cars to the centre, park them and board buses which now goes right past the centre.

In general the commission was satisfied with the transit plans which would greatly increase service by adding five buses to the three now serving the community.

The plan depends on UTA being able to purchase five new buses and it doesn't expect to have them until December or January at the earliest.

The commission referred negotiations on the details of the use of the parking lot to its building maintenance committee.

Protection of farmland a complex issue

There's no sense protecting B.C. farmland from development unless farmers are able to maintain a viable agricultural industry on it, according to Allan Claridge, a member of the B.C. Agricultural Land Commission.

"The greatest mistake we made was allowing people to think we could preserve farmland just because it was a good thing to do," Claridge told about 100 members of the South Saanich Farmers' Institute Tuesday night.

"It's going to cost money."

Claridge, a fruit farmer at Oyama in the Okanagan, said legislation to preserve agricultural land represented a philosophical change in attitude, "but you don't pay bills with philosophy."

"When you tell people you're in favor of farmland, they stop listening," Claridge said. "But willing it so doesn't make it so."

He explained that it was going to be increasingly difficult to protect land unless there is a viable agricultural industry on it, and the land that is protected must be genuinely worthwhile farmland.

Land in the Agricultural Land Reserve won't stay frozen if it has no agricultural value.

Claridge said that when the new legislation protecting agricultural land was enacted it had been demanded by farmers.

"The demand to preserve farmland didn't come from any political party. Farmers asked for it first."

"Nobody was more critical than me in the early days," Claridge said.

While the land commission has made mistakes, Claridge feels it's done a good job, and he thinks it's only natural that some land has been allowed out.

He pointed out that some land has been added to the ALR since the legislation was first introduced.

"We have made some serious mistakes, but it hasn't been all that easy to get the money to fine tune the system."

Fine tuning consists of evaluation of land on an on-site basis.

Many ALR problems exist on Vancouver Island, and Claridge said this is reflected in the fact that half the money allocated to mapping in B.C. this year is going to be spent on the island this year.

Claridge said the land commission needs a lot of input from farmers to help it make decisions.

"Because the Act restricts usage of land, we expect a lot of flak and advice," he said.

"But we cannot use the ALR as a zoning tool," he cautioned, adding that that's something many municipalities try to do.

Claridge also reminded his audience that the Act isn't restricted to large tracts of land.

"You always hear about the large land transactions," he said, "but that doesn't mean we can't protect small parcels."

"There's nothing wrong with small hobby farms or huge farms. They both have a place. But there are times when regional districts have attempted to use the ALR to protect a lifestyle, and that we cannot do."

He said farmers must make their concerns heard, loudly and clearly, and there has to be a positive attitude.

"I don't like hearing, 'I'm only a farmer'," Claridge said. "We have to make people look at us."

About the province's aim of 65 per cent self-sufficiency in food production, Claridge said: "There's no secret. The answer is simple. Pay the people who are doing the work."

"If we do the job properly, we can be proud of it."

He said while acreages in B.C. aren't large by North American standards, the crops grown and livestock raised are quite diverse.

"I think we can be proud of our identity within this province."

Touching on the bad publicity that has accompanied some reversals of commission decisions, Claridge said the commission takes full responsibility for any decision it makes.

"We try to be fair," he said, "and there are no second-class citizens."

Claridge has served on the commission since 1976.

"I have never been approached by a politician and asked to change my mind.

"If we're making a bad decision, blame us."

Hunt on for purse snatchers

City police are looking for three boys after a purse-snatching at Richmond and Fort late Tuesday night.

They are withholding the name of the woman, an employee of Royal Jubilee Hospital who was at a bus stop when attacked by the trio shortly after 11 p.m.

Police said one of them was about 12, the others about 16.

The woman was not hurt. Her purse was later found on the northeast side of the RJH nurse's residence.

Class squeeze by the book?

By AB KENT

A new education ministry manual setting out school building standards will do little to ease constrictions felt by school districts trying to allot adequate classroom space, Greater Victoria chairman Carol Pickup said today.

The new manual is still under wraps, but from what Pickup had been able to learn about it so far, it maintains a rigid approach on space requirements.

Pickup said a classroom squeeze at Cloverdale elementary is symptomatic of what she feels will become an issue between school districts and the education ministry in various parts of the province.

"It's a prime example of a very inflexible approach by the ministry," Pickup said.

Vicki Kuhl, president of Cloverdale parent's auxiliary, wrote Education Minister Brian Smith pointing out that although the school has sufficient space by existing standards to accommodate 466 pupils, it falls three classrooms short after the space is allotted.

One class is being held in half of the library, creating a hazardous fire situation.

Other classes are held in a cloakroom and a staff room in order to fit 16 classes into the timetable, Kuhl said.

Last summer the fire marshal closed the older wing at Cloverdale, where teachers had large, airy classrooms they were reluctant to give up.

In addition, Cloverdale has not been credited with absorbing 50 pupils it took following closure of Tolmie school.

Pickup said needs change according to programs and can't be met simply by assigning square footage according to the number of pupils at a school.

In order to compensate at Cloverdale, the school district applied for permission to erect four new classrooms and an auditorium.

The ministry gave assurances that it would expedite the project, Pickup said.

Trustees took the matter up with the deregulation ministry, which was designed to help capital projects get built more quickly, but so far the district is getting nowhere.

Two years ago it would have cost $750,000 to upgrade the old building, more than the ministry was willing to put into a structure of that age.

"We're 100 per cent behind the Cloverdale parents. They're a very responsible group," Pickup said.

NDP loses battle in numbers game

The NDP failed Tuesday to get proportional representation on legislature committees.

The government holds 53.6 per cent of the 57 seats in the legislature, said Opposition house leader Frank Howard (NDP — Skeena), but has 61.5 per cent of the membership on the committee on standing orders and private bills.

"The government is intent on dominating the committees," Howard said.

"The government is intent on ensuring that its majority is going to be sufficient so that they can even have one or two members absent from those committees if they are meeting, and still carry the day."

Howard said the committee on Crown corporations had two meetings cancelled earlier this year because the government did not have enough members on the committee to control and dominate it.

As a result, he said, the committee was unable to examine the decision by B.C. Hydro to export power to the U.S. or the decision by B.C. Ferry Corp. to cut out service to the north for six weeks.

A move to change the committee makeup was ruled out of order.

UFAWU hooks gov't over opening

By MIKE HUGHES

The current roe herring season sputters on but the controversy surrounding the fishery continues to swirl.

The latest development was the opening Tuesday by the federal fisheries department of a small bay on the central coast where 500 tons of an estimated 1,000 tons of spawning herring were available.

This move brought a sharp rebuke from the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union concerned about dwindling stocks.

"It's absolutely bloody haywire," said union business agent Bill Procopation.

Last week, the fisheries department closed the southern fishery from Cape Caution, off the northern tip of Vancouver Island.

Only 10,153 tons of herring were taken in the southern area, one-third of the amount the fisheries department had predicted would be available.

Procopation's point is that with the stocks down to that extent in the southern waters, there is no way the fisheries department should have opened up the north.

"They seem bound and determined to to allow a fishery until the last ones are caught," he said.

Procopation questioned why there is not more of a public outcry about the way the federal government is managing the fishery.

Bob Humphreys, fisheries' herring co-ordinator, said today his department has a responsibility to the industry to allow a harvest wherever it is possible to do so.

Each area is looked at individually and not fished above a level which will allow sufficient herring to spawn, he said.

He said about 125 gillnet skiffs are fishing in Weeteeam Bay off the north-central coast and only 100 tons has been taken since the areas was opened at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The fisheries department estimated that 5,000 tons of herring would be available in the north coast area but Humphreys said he would be surprised if that much is taken.

"The stocks are not showing that good," he said.

Humphreys countered the union concern about opening the northern waters by saying it is better to harvest a surplus crop than to let too many herring spawn.

This was the case near Denman Island, he said, where the fishery was closed because a strike by the union fishermen resulted in a shortage of packers on the grounds.

Too many fish spawned and a lot of them ended up dead on the beach, Humphreys said.

An estimated 20,000 tons of herring showed up in that area, he said.

The union along with the Native Brotherhood of B.C. — representing about 30 per cent of the herring boats — went on strike before the fishery opened March 2 over a price dispute with the Fisheries Association of B.C.

Probation officers to jail?

VANCOUVER (CP) — A provincial court judge has threatened to jail any probation officer who does not carry out his orders.

Judge Edmond Cronin made the threat after being told by Crown prosecutor Kerr Clark that the probation service does not agree with some of his orders and challenged his power to make them.

"I'm amazed that any probation officer would have the audacity to suggest that I can't order him or her to carry out terms of my order," the judge said.

If any officer dares disobey his order, Cronin said, he will be dealt with under section 116 of the Criminal Code, which says anyone who does not follow a court order without lawful excuse is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to two years imprisonment.

"I take the position that a probation officer is an officer of this court," the judge said. "His authority is my authority . . . he has no independent authority other than what I set out in the order."

If the probation service or anyone else feels the court has extended its jurisdiction, they should seek a ruling on the question in another court, he said.

The issue arose after the judge suspended sentence on Blaine Gilbert La Brash, 31, who had pleaded guilty to 25 of 58 counts of breaking and entering and one count of possession of housebreaking instruments.

The judge also imposed a three-year probation with several conditions, attaching orders directing the probation officer to bring La Brash back to court to determine how the conditions are being carried out.

These conditions led Clark to tell the judge he had a number of complaints from the probation service regarding such orders.

"The probation office has taken the position that in an order of this nature your honor doesn't have the jurisdiction to direct that the probation office bring the person back before the court," he said.

La Brash received a suspended sentence after the judge noted he had fully confessed his crime when arrested by police in January and co-operated with police. The judge also said La Brash had a hare-lip which was a social obstacle to getting a job.

Island gas pipeline feasible

No major technical problems lie in the path of laying a natural gas pipeline on the seabed of Georgia Strait to Vancouver Island.

B.C. Hydro spokesman Tony Simnett said Tuesday an underwater survey has just been completed without discovering any major problems.

Hydro's gas division and the federal government's Institute of Ocean Sciences carried out the study using one of the Pisces submersibles.

A report on the survey goes to the Crown corporations board of directors next month as part of an over-all feasibility study on a gas pipeline to the Island.

Meanwhile, Simnett said other studies on the social and environmental impact are continuing.

Crash plan to add 65 more beds

Forty additional extended-care beds could be ready May 1 at the Priory Hospital in Colwood and 25 more at the Saanich Peninsula Hospital a few months later, spokesmen for the hospitals said today.

They said hospital planners have been preparing for the provincial government's announcement Tuesday that it plans a crash program to deal with the problem of long-term care patients taking up acute-care beds in Victoria hospitals.

The plan to develop 140 extra extended-care beds this year was announced in the legislature by Health Minister Rafe Mair.

The Juan de Fuca Hospital Society has agreed to reopen the House of Peace building on the Priory site in Colwood, providing 40 beds, in May.

Until last July the building housed 71 extended-care patients who at that time were transferred to a new building on the same site.

Charlie Jackson, chairman of the Juan de Fuca Hospital Society which operates the Priory, said the building requires extensive upgrading but can be made suitable for handling the reduced number of patients proposed by Mair.

He said the kitchen in the new facility will be able to handle the additional patients, and the hospital society has kept the old building and equipment in a condition that will make upgrading easy.

The society, he said, has realized the need for extended-care beds and has always considered the possibility that the old building might be called back into service.

Further, the government has approved in principle development of 75 additional extended-care beds by the Juan de Fuca Hospital and 25 beds by the Saanich Peninsula Hospital later this year.

A Saanich hospital spokesman said 25 beds can be added quickly without much modification.

"We've seen the problem creeping up on us as our acute-care beds have been filled with extended-care patients so our board has considered the possiblity of adding more beds."

It's just a matter of building a small wing of rooms since the existing facility can accommodate support systems like heating and kitchen requirements, he said.

The Capital Regional Hospital Commission must give its approval before these projects can proceed.

The 140 beds would be in addition to 450 extended-care and intermediate-care beds already scheduled to come on stream in the Victoria area this year.

"Planning is under way or consideration is being given to another 430 intermediate-care beds in the area," Mair said.

These beds should become available in 1981 and 1982, he said.

"These measures, combined with other modifications in the processing of applications and admissions procedures, should have the dual effect of ensuring that long-term care patients receive appropriate programs and facilities and make more acute-care beds available."

Nurse pact close

Talks continued today in an effort to pound out a contract for 12,500 B.C. registered nurses working in 113 hospitals.

Jerry Miller, spokesman for the Registered Nurses Association of B.C., said both sides are close to a tentative agreement.

However, completion of the contract with the Health Labor Relations Association may not come until late today or even next week, he said.

Miller explained that mediator Clarke Gilmour has scheduled a four-day holiday beginning Thursday.

So if the talks aren't concluded today they will have to reconvene next Tuesday.

The nurses voted in February by a 98-per-cent margin to go on strike to back demands for a substantial catch-up, wage increase. However, 72-hour strike notice has not been served.

Use This Home Recipe Plan to Lose Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of bulky unsightly fat right in your own home. Use this recipe plan yourself. It's easy — no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drug store and ask for four ounces of Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoons full twice a day and follow the Naran plan.

If your first purchase does not show you the simple, easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't seem to disappear almost like magic from neck, chin, arms, bust, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow the easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears — how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

PNE manager quits over 'differences'

VANCOUVER (CP) — General manager Dal Town of the Pacific National Exhibition has resigned his post in what PNE president Erwin Swangard described Tuesday as a fundamental difference of opinion over management of the exhibition.

Swangard called a press conference to announce that the PNE directors have accepted town's resignation, effective May 1, and that Town has gone on vacation until that date.

A written statement issued by Swangard quoted Town as saying in a letter of resignation that, because of the difference over management, he believed it best to terminate his employment.

Doctors demand $100,000 a year

Figures provided Tuesday by the health ministry show that doctors' fee demands will be even more costly than previously believed.

The figures indicate doctors' demands that their fees be restored to a level relative to 1968 income status and a lower patient load would cost about $390 a person, not $265 as previously estimated.

The reason is that published spending estimates for this year, in which the $265 estimate was based, do not include $159 million recovered from medicare premiums.

Chairman Doug Weir of the Medical Services Commission said that last year's estimated expenditure does not include another $40 million over budget expenses incurred in part because of fee increases negotiated last year.

B.C Medical Association spokesmen told an inquiry into medical care last week here that the profession wants to restore the ratio between a doctor's income and that of the average industrial worker to what it was in 1968 when medicare was introduced.

That would boost the average doctor's net income to about $100,000 a year.

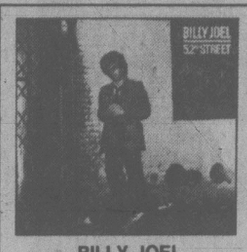

Dr. Alex Mandeville, incoming president of the association which bargains fees for B.C.'s 4,000 doctors, said they want the entire difference restored in next year's fee settlement.

He and other doctors from the association's militant reform group said they also want patient loads cut by 50 per cent, which would require further fee increases.

Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives are being encouraged to spend a day as grocery store baggers in hopes of getting a better feel for the pinch of inflation. But those promoting the election-year project, Republicans themselves, want to ensure that the congressmen don't botch the job and lose potential votes. So, the representatives, who earn $60,700 a year, are being told: Open the bag carefully and quietly. Don't put glass bottles atop other goods. Keep the butter away from the onions lest the butter smell. Simple, perhaps, but as Representative Robert Walker, who's partly responsible for the idea of political bagmen says: "Congressmen could do themselves a lot of political damage if they put the bread on the bottom."

Michener

Criminals or their relatives who profit by selling stories of their crimes to newspapers should pay tax on the money, Lord Denning has ruled in Britain's Appeal Court, which dismissed an appeal by Patricia Wilson, whose husband Charles Wilson was a member of a gang convicted after Britain's Great Train Robbery, which involved the theft in 1963 of more than $5.7 million. Denning said that Mrs. Wilson must pay tax on the $111,000 she received from the News of the World newspaper for articles on the gang which held up the Glasgow-London night train.

The Olympic flame has been doused in Moscow and there won't be a gold medal — but a brass ring isn't bad. Two months ago, Dick Mason, news director at radio station KKDJ in Fresno, Calif., came up with the idea of using Moscow, Idaho, as an alternate site for the 1980 Summer Olympics. But somehow the idea just hasn't caught on. "Plans to hold the Olympics here are at zero," says Chuck Simmons, Moscow Chamber of Commerce manager — who did add, however, that the idea netted the city about $250,000 in free publicity. "I've received letters from people all over the place who are changing their vacation plans just to pass through town to see what Moscow is all about."

James Michener, in announcing a $500,000 endowment to the University of Iowa Writer's Workshop setting up a trust fund for budding young writers: "It's a fundamental fact about writing that the first three books are written at 4 o'clock in the morning, since most writers are trying to work on their books while employed in fulltime jobs."

Dear Abby:

Yesterday my children were given "goodies" to play with that were taken from our hostess' place of employment. She has all sorts of little odds and ends at her house that she frankly admits she's taken from where she works. She makes no secret of the fact that she just helps herself.

She inherited this trait from her father, and she's passed it on to her children.

Perhaps a mention in your column about this will wake a few people up.

Withhold My Name

Dear Withhold:

"Employee pilfering" is a high-sounding euphemism for stealing — a billion-dollar international disease — for which we, the consumers, pay. If anyone out there has a solution, short of frisking and X-raying every employee as he leaves his job, please submit it.

Dear Abby:

My husband and I are in the wholesale carpet business. When so-called friends show us carpet they just had installed, tell us what they paid for it and then ask if we think they got a good deal, what should we say?

Nine times out of 10 we could have given them a better deal, and that is what I tell them.

Later my husband and I argue about this; he says, "Never knock the competition — regardless."

Abby, these same people never even come into our store to see what we have, or to compare prices. I say why should we consider their feelings when they never consider ours?

The Wife

Dear Wife:

I vote with your husband. Never knock the competition.

Dear Abby:

I read with interest the comments of Half a Loaf — the woman who had a 30-year romance going with a married man whose wife wouldn't give him a divorce.

Well, I know how she feels, because I've been part of a triangle for a year and a half and I hope it lasts forever.

If I'm getting his wife's leftovers, perhaps she is keeping the bone and throwing away the steak.

This man is my dearest friend as well as my lover. Never have I derived so much strength, support, peace and contentment from a relationship.

I'm no child. I'm 40, been divorced for six years and have children. I have a job I love, and earn enough to support myself and family.

This man isn't the only man I could get — he's the only man I want. He will not divorce his wife. She needs him to survive. She's been his wife for 20 years and doesn't know how to be anything else.

I wish he were all mine, but he isn't, and I have no desire to break up a family. Nobody has everything, and I, too, am happy with half a loaf. Sign me ...

Happy

Better food, a bigger slice

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Regardless of whether you prefer a hamburger packed in its own plastic container and assembled by a harried teenager in a fast-food outlet or goose liver pate on delicate china presented by a waiter with an accent in an elegant restaurant, sometime in the next five years you, if you're the average Canadian, will begin spending half your food dollar eating out.

The more accustomed we get to eating out the more demanding we're going to be, at least according to various people in the Victoria restaurant business.

We're going to want better tasting, more exotic, healthier, faster and cheaper meals, they claim.

If some of those expectations seem to be at odds with each other it's because we divide our eating out into two categories.

The restaurant industry ranges between two extremes: those selling the equivalent of a relatively inexpensive and quick three-squares-a-day meal and those selling dining as an expensive, status entertainment.

The impact of one seems to balance the other.

While fine dining establishments claim their customers are becoming more discerning and demanding all the time, fast food chains with their consistent, if somewhat manufactured, food continue to multiply.

Fred Oldfield, president of the Restaurant and Food Services Association in B.C. and part-owner of The Latch restaurant in Sidney, said Victoria has the second highest number of restaurants per capita in the country.

Regardless of the type of restaurant, people want better quality food, said Oldfield, and the association attempts to encourage its members to produce just that.

"Victoria is no longer just a roast-beef-and-yorkshire-pudding city," was how Armondo Barbon of North Douglas Food Distributors stated the case for the growth in the restaurant industry during the last 10 years.

Barbon, can take some of the credit for that because his restaurant supply company has led the way in providing anything from frozen mixed vegetables to Russian caviar.

North Douglas Distributors acts as a grocery store for just about every restaurant and most delicatessens in the city. The size of the tins and bottles on the shelves may be larger and the brand names on the labels different but it's really a grocery store for restaurants.

The chefs of the city have encouraged him to expand the variety of goods he carries until these days when he's even been asked to track down suppliers of alligator and elephant meat, he said.

He predicts the restaurant industry will move to a greater use of prepared foods as a method of maintaining variety, keeping costs down without the sacrifice of too much quality.

Prepared or pre-prepared food, as it's sometimes described, depending on the degree of work done to it, can be applied to a variety of foods from prepeeled vegetables to huge tins of soup stock to fully prepared and frozen main courses like the chicken a la kiev that the Empress Hotel, among others, serves.

The prepared food is manufactured in factories overseen by chefs following established recipes. Vancouver has companies producing frozen entrees such as lasagna and quiche lorraine while canned soup and sauce bases are often shipped from large factories in the U.S.

While individual restaurants hesitate to say how much prepared food they use, Barbon said, almost every restaruant in the city uses at least some prepared food and the trend is definitely growing.

Although prepared food may cost slightly more restaurants save money in the long-run by being able to keep staff costs down.

It's difficult and expensive finding capable help. As executive chef Heinz Bieli of the Empress explained, a kitchen the size of the Empress's would have to employ a full-time vegetable peeler if it didn't buy prepeeled vegetables. Even though prepeeled vegetables cost more than unpeeled, Bieli said, they're less expensive than having someone do it in the kitchen.

Nevertheless the Empress has about 35 kitchen staff members during the winter with up to 60 in the busy summer period.

The Empress uses a variety of other prepared items but the chicken a la kiev is the only entree it serves that's almost completely prepared when it arrives at the kitchen. Kitchen staff just bake the frozen chicken dish and add the final touches before serving it.

Nor are small restaurants able to fare any better, said John Dove former owner of La Petite Columbe. In a kitchen such as his with only one chef who with the assistance of one or more helpers, depending on the size of the restaurant, does all the work a certain amount of prepared food also must be used.

Customers demand variety on the menu and one way to meet that demand is by keeping some frozen, at least partially prepared, main dishes in the freezer.

Dove said customers wouldn't pay the high cost of certain dishes if they were made completely from scratch. "It's a matter of sacrificing a little quality for a considerable cost. People give lip service to wanting top quality but they really aren't prepared to pay for it."

Institutions that serve a relatively large number of meals daily are, at least in other cities, leading the way in using prepared foods. However Victoria General Hospital seems to be one institution bucking that trend very successfully.

Director of food services at VGH Elizabeth Richter says hospital food service is really the most challenging of the food industry.

She serves about 2,000 meals a day to patients and staff at the hospital. Those meals must be cheap, nutritious and appetizing. Not always an easy task, according to Richter, but not one that has to be turned over to prepared foods either.

As a matter of fact it was a cost-saving measure that prompted one of the most-complimented of the hospital kitchen's dishes.

One day, every hospital department was asked to come up with a cost-saving measure that would help ease the budget pince.

Richter discussed the matter with her staff and they decided to begin making their own soups rather than buying canned ones.

Now soups are one of the most popular items at the hospital and a source of regular compliments from patients and staff.

Unlike almost every restaurant in the city the hospital makes it's own stock, which the soup cook claims is the secret behind its success.

But maintaining high quality at low costs has forced a different form of economy on VGH, Richter explained, the hospital no longer offers a choice of menu. One basic meal is served, although variations are made according to the type of diet required for medical reasons, she said.

This may be a trend in institution food service, she said, because it maintains quality while reducing costs.

White Spot restaurant, one of a chain of about 25 in the province, has a unique system. Each individual restaurant has a limited kitchen staff but it receives daily deliveries of food prepared in its so-called commissary in Vancouver.

The meals are put together here, heated and the finishing touches added but all the food is mass produced in the commissary.

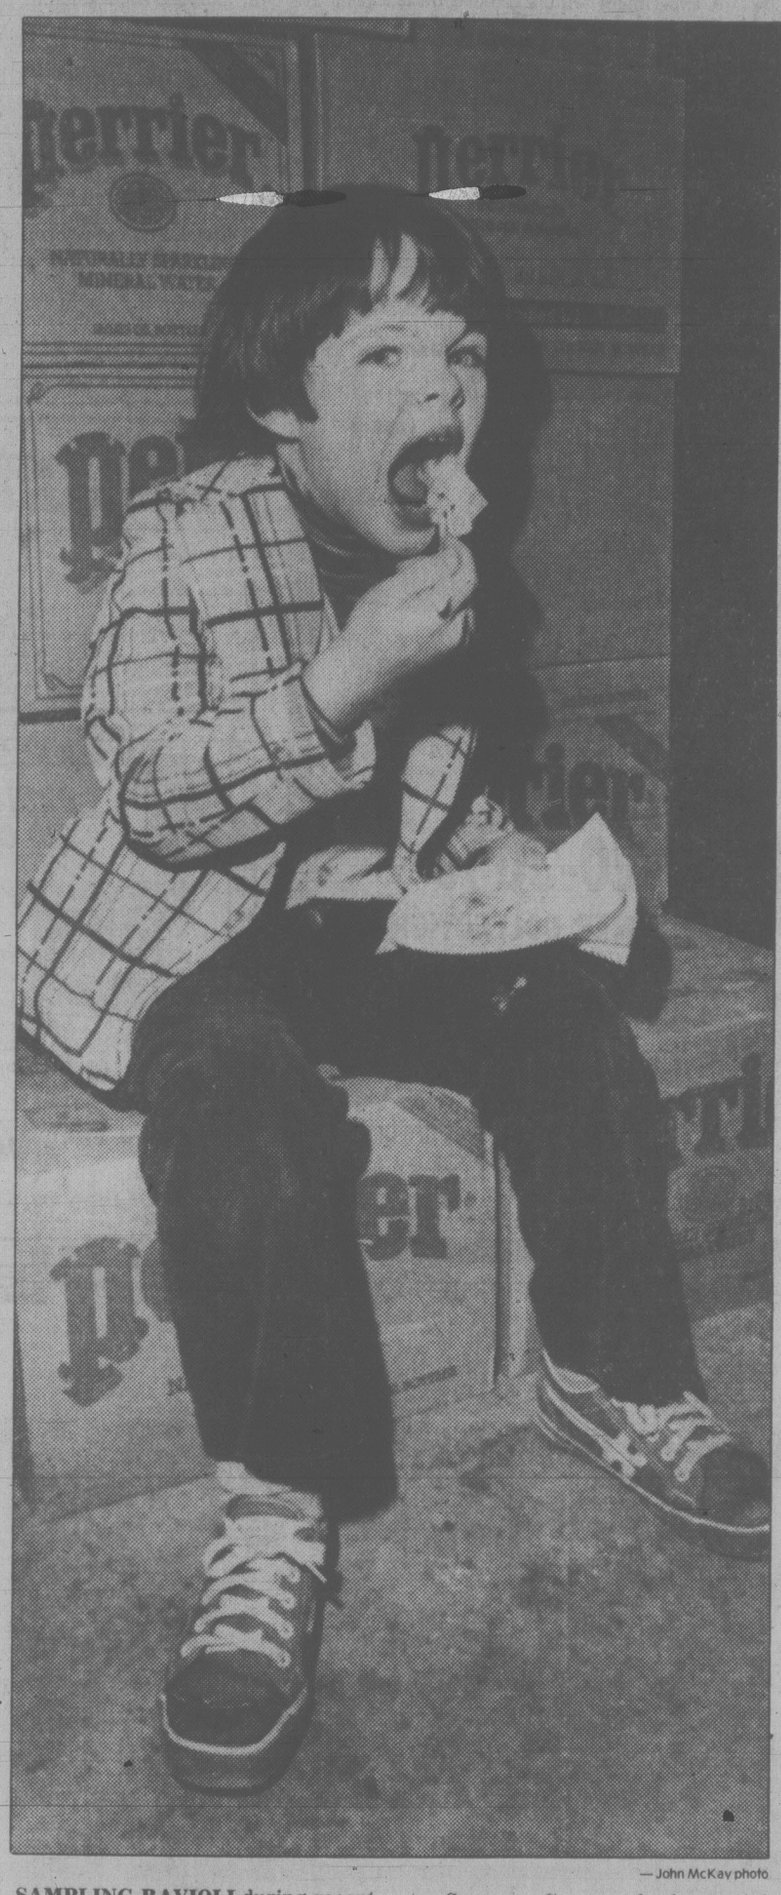

Tom Murray, the local manager, says this system works very well. The commissary hires capable chefs to oversee preparation and a quality control officer is constantly checking to make sure every dish meets the highest standards.

Murray was the only restauranteur to volunteer information on nuitrition. It will become an important topic as people eat more of their meals away from home. Vitamins can be destroyed by over cooking and some research suggests freezing also reduces the nutritional value of some food.

White Spot customers are growing more health conscious, Murray said, fried foods are less popular and the demand for salads is growing. Liver and onions is the most recent addition to the menu.

White Spot makes it's own bread which is probably healthier than the bread purchased in stores, according to Murray, because no preservatives are added. "If our bread isn't eaten in a couple of days it moulds," he said.

It seems unlikely though that all the side effects of prepared food will be advantageous but the restaurant industry can't be shouldered with the blame. As John Dove said, "Nothing is completely, freshly prepared from scratch anymore. Your mother certainly doesn't do most of her cooking from scratch; in fact she probably uses more prepared foods in the home than restaurants do."

Tears take testing for toxic releases

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Tears, long identified with human emotions by poets, have recently come under the scrutiny of scientists. Blood and urine have long been carefully analyzed, but the chemical contents of tears have received little or no scientific study.

Dr. William H. Frey II, in the Department of Psychiatry at the Ramsey Medical Center in St. Paul, Minn., has been concentrating on the chemical and biological understanding of tears.

A group of students collected their tears in test tubes while watching "tear-jerking" movies. Dr. Frey has come to the interesting conclusion that tears may actually rid the body of toxic substances. He found, for example, that tears of sorrow have a higher concentration of proteins than do tears produced in irritation and anger. He now is pursuing this lead and hopes to find out the nature of these proteins and the emotions they may represent.

There is a further implication in these studies. If it is, indeed, true that emotional tears serve a purpose in relieving stress, it may give a greater insight into illnesses that are caused by suppression of emotion. Ulcers of the stomach may be one of those diseases.

A group of drugs used to control severe depression are known as "tricyclic" chemicals. Their value has long been established in this area.

Doctors using the drugs uncovered an incidental finding of importance. Dr. J. Thomas Bigger, Jr., and his co-workers at the Columbia Presbyterian Medical Center in New York, found that imipramine, one of the tricyclic agents, was very effective in the control of some heart irregularities.

Dr. Bigger said, "We are so encouraged by results with psychiatric patients that we have begun studies of tricyclic anti-depressant drugs for heart patients who do not have any depression. The initial results are extremely encouraging."

The original program is now being expanded in other hospitals around the country by physicians who are impressed by the potentials of the study.

An ingredient in cottonseed oil is being studied for its possibility as a male contraceptive agent. This emanates from a finding in China where it was discovered that cooking with crude cottonseed oil could lead to male infertility.

The ingredient, gossypol, is now being tried in experimental animals. If the ongoing trial studies show promise, there may be an extensive study in humans.

The exact method of action of gossypol has not yet been fully established.

Daily bread often made without yeast

hilda beastall

Bread made without yeast as a leavening to make it light textured is so different to our North American daily bread that most people think of it as being in a separate category. Yet other nations make their breads without yeast for every-day use as well as for special occasions. Some nations never have used yeast, but depend on different grains or seeds ground to a semiflour condition for making baked or pan-cooked breads.

It depends on the customs of those around us and on what is available as to how we experiment with making types of bread. One we will enjoy as a special once in a while; another will be so thoroughly good to our taste that it is accepted with pleasure whenever it can be made; and some are not really bread but a rather sensible form of cake.

Among the last group are those under names such as Date Bread, Banana Bread, Raisin Bread. Made without yeast, using a minimum of sugar and fat, they are useful for occasional lunchbox fare as substitutes for sweeter, richer cakes and cookies, because with their firmer texture they can be sliced for packing and seldom crumble.

In place of yeast, all three forms of bread use either baking powder or baking soda as leavening and also varying amounts of fat. Since these are not useful as nutrients if overdone, we keep them to a minimum, and use a form of fat considered acceptable — it may be a soft type of margarine, a vegetable oil, or an unsalted butter.

The following Graham Bread is a favorite with all who have enjoyed it with us.

It contains no fat and no yeast, yet is delicious hot, cold or toasted, alone, or with cheese and other salad items, or with fruits.

GRAHAM BREAD
- 15 ml brown sugar
- 375 ml buttermilk (from powder, see below)
- 5 ml baking soda
- 10 ml blackstrap molasses
- 250 ml unbleached flour
- 375 ml graham flour (see NOTE below)
- 5 ml salt

Buttermilk note: use 45 ml buttermilk powder in 375 ml water.

Graham Flour note: substitute 250 ml wholewheat flour, plus 60 ml bulk bran, and 60 ml wheat germ.

Measure each ingredient into mixing bowl; stir and mix all together.

Bake in greased and floured small loaf pan or 1 L round casserole, in moderate 180 C oven for about 45 minutes.

Test with clean knife for being done in centre as with a cake. Remove from pan and cool on wire rack.

Next is a Sunflower Bread for spring and summer walking or bicycling trips. It is dense in texture so that a little takes you a long way. Try it while still around home, you might like to vary the ingredients in some way though it belongs in the category of yeastless breads usually enjoyed as it is.

SUNFLOWER BREAD
- 1 cup unbleached flour
- 1 cup wholewheat flour
- ¾ cup round sunflower seeds
- ¾ cup wheat germ
- ½ cup rice polishings
- ¼ cup soy flour
- 1 tsp baking powder
- ¾ tsp salt
- 2 Tbsp sunflower oil
- 1½ cups water

Measure and mix all dry ingredients. Add oil and water in centre. Stir well to mix.

Spoon into well greased bread pan 9x5x3-inch and two small foil pans for "tasters."

Bake in slow 165 deg.C oven for 1¼ hours or until brown and firm. Test with clean knife in centre.

Remove from pan; cool on wire rack. For soft crust, brush with oil while still hot.

Slice thin and use with anything you like or by itself.

The next recipe is somewhat similar but with mixed cooked vegetables (or cooked fruits).

As you can see, it may be changed according to whim using whatever cooked vegetables are ready in the refrigerator. Or you can quickly cook up dates and raisins, or use prunes and currants. Figs cooked a little would make a nice addition too. Experiment.

VEGETABLE OR FRUIT PROTEIN BREAD
- 500 ml wholewheat flour
- 125 ml rye flour
- 50 ml soy flour
- 500 ml cooked vegetables (carrots, spinach, peas or prunes, currants)
- 50 ml vegetable oil or soft margarine
- 5 ml salt

Mash the chosen cooked vegetables (or fruits), draining off the free liquid, if any, to use in mixing if needed. Mix with all remaining ingredients, adding a little more flour or liquid as required, ending with flour as a coating.

Mix very well and knead a little until smooth. Shape dough and place in greased large loaf pan. Slash top for expansion.

Put aside at room temperature for about 4 hours to blend flavors.

Bake in slow oven 165 C for 1 hour; test with knife to be sure it is done in centre.

Cool on rack. With the moist vegetable (or fruit) content, this is a heavy dense loaf, very good when thinly sliced. It needs to be in the large loaf size as with the amount in this recipe; it does not "halve" well. I made it with half amounts because enough vegetables were not ready-cooked and my time was limited. The small loaf was too dense and the outer coat e trifle dry. This should not happen with a larger loaf.

To keep these breads at home when baked, they must be in the refrigerator because of the high moisture content. They might even be frozen for future use, though$I have not tried this.

For those who cook for one or two, breads without yeast are fine foods to have ready with no further preparation. They make nutritious meals by adding a slice of cheese, or a hard-boiled egg, fresh fruit or salad greens which you may still have growing in the garden coldframe, or in glass-covered box on the balcony.

Professional Weight Control is opening a Victoria clinic.

GRAND OPENING MARCH 17!

Lose 3-5 Lbs. Per Week!

Weight no longer. Call 592-5532.

PROFESSIONAL WEIGHT CONTROL CLINICS
Open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday
Chargex and Master Charge accepted

We call it the "Lifetime Lifeline"
Because we're really excited about our Victoria opening we've got this special offer: a free "Lifetime Lifeline" card will be given to our first 100 clients. It's good for the lifetime of the holder and allows you to come back to any Weight Control Clinic anytime for free consultation and guidance. Only 100 will be given away, so please hurry if you wish to take advantage of this "once in a lifetime" offer.

Starting March 17, the long weight for a proven method of controlling that unruly waistline is over. No fads, just results. The Professional Weight Control Clinic will teach you how to take off those unwanted pounds and keep them off.

A Professional system.
We're proud of our weight control program, and we're proud of our clients' successes. Fact: thousands of Canadians have learned to master their weight control problems. Fact: our average weekly success is over four pounds per client. Fact: the average weight loss during a basic program is over 22 pounds per client. Fact: our program works for both men and women.

How does weight control work?
It's a simple three-step process. First, you meet with one of our registered nurses to set a sensible weight loss goal. You will meet daily in a private session to gain the knowledge and confidence you need to accomplish your goal. Second, once your weight goal has been achieved, you enter the most important stage — weight stabilization. Your nurse normalizes your diet over an eight-week period and teaches you how to keep your results. Third, once your weight has been stabilized, we offer a no obligation three month maintenance period to keep you in control if you gain back three or more pounds.

Say cheese — and smile

By PAT DUFOUR

Synonymous with the mention of Holland are tulips, clogs and — last but not least — cheese.

Here this week from her native Vancouver, home economics consultant Phyllis Dennett is promoting Dutch cheese for Holland Imported Cheese. She is no casual salesperson when it comes to cheese.

While an average of 17 pounds per year of cheese is eaten by every Canadian, she figures she consumes about 30 pounds in one year.

She landed the account in 1972 when she roomed with the company's Ontario representative while attending a convention in Halifax.

Her roommate, Kay Spicer, noting Dennett consumed regular portions of cheese and crackers every night, decided she was a natural for the job.

How can you tell the real Edam and Gouda cheeses? It's easy. Each cheese has the government stamp of approval.

While a little more expensive than domestic cheeses, the Dutch varieties have a special taste of their own, carefully nurtured over the years.

Cheese lacks only fibre and iron. Combine cheese with a slice of wholewheat bread and some raisins, dry fruit or raisins and you have the perfect meal.

As an example, 3½ ounces of Gouda contains 25.6 grams of protein, compared to 18.7 in the equivalent amount of chuck beef, 25.2 in halibut and 16 in an egg yolk. Edam is even better, containing 27.9 grams in 3½ ounces.

Dennett says, for peak flavor, cheese should be removed from the refrigerator ½ to ¾ of an hour before serving.

HOT CHEESE AND SEAFOOD SALAD

6-7 baking shells or ramekins
2 cups fresh, tinned or frozen crab meat and shrimp
1 medium onion, chopped
¼ cup chopped green pepper
¼ cup toasted slivered almonds
1 cup chopped celery
2 cups coarsely shredded Edam or Gouda cheese
1 cup mayonnaise
¼ cup lemon juice
1 tablespoon grated lemon rind
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon dry mustard
½ cup breadcrumbs
2 tablespoons butter, melted.

Combine fresh, tinned or frozen seafood, cheese and chopped vegetables. Set combination aside.

Mix mayonnaise, lemon juice and rind, salt and mustard. Combine with seafood mixture.

Light, savory cheese and shrimp puffs for bite-sized snacks

Spoon about one cup into each shell or ramekin. Combine crumbs and butter for topping and sprinkle over mixture in each shell.

Bake in 300 degree Fahrenheit oven 10 to 15 minutes or until just heated.

Mixture may be heated in a 1½ or 2 quart casserole for 20 to 25 minutes. Serves six.

Going from every-day to party fare are two recipes that could come in very handy next time you have company and want to serve something that's both nourishing and different.

The first is cheese and shrimp puffs. This recipe makes between 4 and 5 dozen appetizer puffs.

CHEESE AND SHRIMP PUFFS

½ cup butter
1 cup water
1¾ cups all-purpose flour
6 eggs
2 cups Edam or Gouda cheese
1 cup finely diced cooked shrimp or drained, flaked tuna
1 tablesoon chopped onion
Salt and pepper
Dash of tabasco sauce
Oil for deep-fat frying.

Heat butter and water in saucepan. When the mixture boils add flour all at once. Stir vigorously with a wooden spoon until batter leaves the sides of the saucepan. Remove from heat.

Allow to cool about one minute. Add eggs, one at a time, beating well after each addition. Stir in shredded cheese, shrimp and seasoning.

Pour cooking oil into deep frypan to a depth of about two inches. Heat to 375-400 degrees Fahrenheit.

Drop cheese and shrimp batter by teaspoonful into hot oil. Fry puffs, about 12 at a time, until they are golden on both sides. Remove with slotted spoon, drain on paper towels. Serve warm in a knapkin-lined dish.

Puffs can be kept warm in a 200 degree oven.

Tip: Freeze. To reheat, place on cookie sheet in 350 degree oven for 12 to 15 minutes.

EDAM ONION PIE

1 nine-inch unbaked pie shell
4 strips crisp cooked bacon, crumpled
4 medium onions, sliced
¼ cup butter or margarine
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
4 eggs
1 cup milk
2 cups, shredded Edam cheese
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper.

Cook onion slices in butter in large skillet over low heat until limp. Stir in flour. Remove from heat.

Beat eggs, milk and seasonings together. Fold in onions, crumbled bacon and cheese. Pour into prepared pie shell.

Bake at 400 degrees Fahrenheit for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 325 degrees and bake 20-25 minutes until centre is firm.

Cut in wedges. Gouda cheese may be substituted for the Edam. Makes six servings.

Pie wins $40,000

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Millicent Caplan's original recipe for Italian Zucchini Crescent Pie costs 70 cents a serving. But it earned her $40,000.

The meatless main dish concocted by the Tamarac, Fla., woman took the grand prize among 100 entries from finalists across the U.S. in the Pillsbury Bake-off competition held at a Miami Beach hotel.

Judges, who announced the winners, checked out the recipes in special kitchens installed in the hotel's ballroom.

A total of $100,000 in prize money was awarded by the Pillsbury Co. for recipes in three categories: flour, package mix and refrigerated dough. The categories were further divided into: special occasion, ethnic and economy.

Pasteurized caviar keeps question & answer

Q. I have a glass of "Caviar-Malossol, product of USSR, 4 ounces." I have had it about eight years. The color looks O.K. to me. Is it safe to eat?

A. The product that you refer to is almost without doubt pasteurized and vacuum sealed. That type of caviar is not likely to deteriorate if it has remained well sealed, and there is no reason to suppose that it has not been. The difference between pasteurized, vacuum-sealed caviar and fresh caviar is the difference between night and day. To put it another way, if you offered me that caviar and I were very hungry, I would probably eat it.

Q. Can you tell me how to determine how to cut fresh asparagus so that the tender tips can be served up and the stringy stalks be saved for less auspicious use.

I hate to waste the tender part but also want no shred of toughness in what I serve.

A. Quite simple — and there's no guesswork at all. Just take the fresh stalks, bend each in a horseshoe and it will snap off exactly where tough meets tender.

Q. I am confused over the differences between cottage cheese, pot cheese and farmer's cheese. Can you explain how they differ?

A. Basically they are all prepared in a similar manner, the difference being in the "wetness" or "dryness" of the cheeses. Cottage cheese is made by using milk that has naturally soured. When this happens, the milk becomes a fragile solid, and this is called clabbered milk. The "clabber" is put into cloth or another material to drain. The curds — cheese — results when the thin liquid known as whey drips out. The clabbering process can be hastened by adding rennet to the fresh milk. Cottage cheese is one of the first stages when the curd turns into an edible fairly firm but still wet mass. Pot cheese is left to drain for a longer period of time. More whey drains away and it, naturally, becomes a drier cheese. Farmer's cheese and pot cheese are practically identical, except that farmer's cheese is generally molded. More often than not it is molded in the shape of a rectangular mass and can be sliced. In some sections of the country it is known as "pressed" cheese.

Q. I know that oysters Rockefeller are a Southern specialty. Then how in the world did they get a Yankee name?

A. The origin of oysters Rockefeller is generally credited to Antoine's Restaurant in New Orleans. It is said to be the creation of Jules Alciatore who belonged to the second generation after the restaurant's founder. He once told an interviewer that he had called the dish — which is made with great quantities of butter — Rockefeller because they are so rich.

Q. I was recently given a bottle of walnut oil. I have no notion of what to do with it. Can you tell me?

A. This is one of the most frequently asked questions put to this column. Walnut oil is obviously the oil of pressed walnut meats just as olive oil is derived from olives, peanut oil from peanuts and so on. It is simply very fine salad oil. Use it in the preparation of salad dressings just as you would olive or peanut oils.

Readers are invited to send in questions about food and cooking techniques to the Food Editor, The New York Times, 229 West 43rd Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Unfortunately, unpublished questions cannot be answered individually.

craig claiborne

I was recently amused to discover the alacrity with which this column could be transported from the kitchen to the laundry room.

Not since I became involved in a contretemps over what is and what isn't a knuckle sandwich has there been such an outpouring of letters from readers telling me that when it comes to washing machines I wouldn't know pre-wash from spin dry.

The crisis arose a couple of weeks ago when a reader wrote to say that a neighbor spin-dries her lettuce in a washing machine.

"She rinses the lettuce," she said, "puts it in a pillowcase and then spins it around" in the machine. She wanted to know if I thought the neighbor was kidding.

I averred that I did, indeed, believe her ribs were being tickled, adding that I dry my lettuce leaves in a widely available plastic European import, in which the leaves are spin-dried by centrifugal force.

More than a score of readers wrote to assure me that North America's washing machine manufacturers are a godsend for those who entertain on a large scale.

"When preparing salad greens for 20 or more people," Elizabeth Bole Eddison of Lexington, Mass., advised, "I wash the lettuce, put it into a pillowslip or pillowcase, tie the top together tightly with a rubber band, put the pillowcase with its lettuce load into the washing machine and turn the machine on for the gentle spin cycle." Within moments, she continues, you will have dried, uncrushed lettuce for your party.

A pillowcase, as it turns out, is the most popular container for the lettuce. Other readers, however, use a large bath or Turkish towel, or two bath towels that have been sewn together.

Peggy Pardy of Goshen, N.Y., uses a large mesh-type onion bag because her region is famous for its onions.

And Alice Knopf, the wife of the publisher, notes that she "also washes spinach on the gentle wool cycle" of her washer.

A letter recently arrived from Peggy Boehm of Rye, N.Y., that speaks for itself.

"There is a line in The Women where Ilka Chase (my memory goes all the way back to the original Broadway production) is crestfallen when she traces back a delicious piece of gossip about one of her friends, only to find that she herself had originated the malicious tidbit.

"I was reminded of it the other day when I complimented my daughter-in-law on her gravy.

"'I just did what you taught me,' she said. 'Put coffee in it.'

"And so I had. But that was many lives ago, and somewhere over the years I'd lost sight of that thrifty little nifty.

Now I'm happily reintroducing it into my bag of tricks. Although my present life style involves a minimum of cooking, it fits very well into the nouvelle cuisine of my nouvelle regime, which is dictated by my nouvelle waistline, an endangered species.

"The trick is one I invented myself back in the days when I was a harried housewife with a large family. One particularly difficult day as I was preparing a rich brown gravy to go with the roast, I needed a little liquid to thin it down.

I'd used up all the vegetable liquors, but a half cup of coffee stood within arm's reach on the counter — nearer than the faucet in the sink — too handy to ignore.

"'They'll never notice,' I thought as I blended it in, but they did.

"This gravy is something else,' said the kids, and, 'My compliments to the chef,' from my husband.

"It surprises me that no one else has ever discovered my secret, but it's high time. The method is simplicity itself, whether you start from scratch or take short cuts. Just add from a quarter to a half a cup of black coffee, unsweetened of course, to any soup, gravy or stew. It will do wonderful things, intensifying and subtly enhancing the natural flavor without imparting a coffee taste. Like salt, it will work its magic without adding a flavor of its own, and also like salt, it will add no extra calories.

"Truly a case of: 'Waste not, waist, yes!'"

But, lest anyone ask if, with my Southern background, I've ever heard of using black coffee to make red eye gravy, the answer is yes. I also know that the Swedes used sweetened coffee with cream when cooking roast lamb. But Mrs. Boehm's notions are fascinating and worth considering.

Catch cod for the cold

the 60-minute gourmet

Almost every cook and chef I know has one favorite fish, one whose flavor and texture he prizes above all others. And it may vary from season to season. In the spring it may be salmon, for which I have a craving once the season begins. After a while, however, I find that my craving diminishes with familiarity.

When halibut is plentiful, I never tire of it. It is only as the season passes and the cost is elevated that I reluctantly forego it. To my taste, as I have noted before, the greatest fish to be found in the market at this season is fresh cod, which thus far is plentiful and will be, I am told, for several weeks.

Fresh cod has a sweetness in flavor and a tender, flaky texture that makes it irresistible. What's more it is an incredibly easy fish to cook whether it is simply simmered in seasoned water with a little milk (the milk helps keep its pure white color) or simply broiled over a good fire.

One of the best cold weather dishes I know is made with fresh cod. This is cod that is blended in a cream sauce with cooked potato slices. Fresh cod complements the simplicity of potatoes and vice versa. The only seasoning for the sauce is a light grating of nutmeg with a touch of cayenne pepper.

This dish is quickly made. The cod and potato slices are cooked separately but simultaneously. And as they cook there is ample time to start making the simple cream sauce that will blend and bind them together. Ideally, the dish should be served as soon as the various elements are combined, although it can be reheated briefly before serving.

Fresh cod in cream sauce with potatoes is sufficient unto itself as a main course. You may, however, wish to serve it with an herbed green salad.

MORUE FRAICHE A LA CREME
(Fresh cod in cream sauce)

2 pounds fresh, skinless codfish, cut crosswise into 6-inch steaks.
1 large onion, cut into quarter-inch-thick slices, about 2 cups.
1 bay leaf.
4 whole cloves.
2 cups milk.
½ cup water plus water to cover the vegetables. Salt to taste.
10 peppercorns, crushed.
3 large Idaho potatoes, about 2½ pounds, peeled and cut into slices about one-third inch thick.
2 large zucchini, about three-quarters of a pound, trimmed and cut into slices about one-third inch thick.
3 tablespoons butter.
4 tablespoons flour.
½ cup heavy cream.
Freshly ground pepper to taste.
¼ teaspoon finely grated nutmeg.
⅛ teaspoon cayenne.
½ cup finely chopped parsley.

1. Select a casserole that will hold the codfish in one layer.

2. Arrange the fish pieces in the casserole. Scatter the onion rings over the fish. Add the bay leaf, cloves, milk, half a cup of water, salt and peppercorns. Bring to the simmer. Cover and let cook about five minutes or just until the fish flakes easily when touched with a fork. Set aside.

3. Meanwhile, put the potatoes and water to cover in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Cook five minutes and add the zucchini and cook about two or three minutes or until they are barely tender. Drain and set aside.

4. Pour off the cooking liquid from the fish. There should be about two and one-half cups. Set it aside.

5. Melt the butter in a saucepan and add the flour, stirring with a whisk. When blended, add the reserved cooking liquid, stirring rapidly with the whisk. When blended and smooth, add the cream, salt and pepper to taste, nutmeg and cayenne.

6. Select an oval dish (a dish measuring about 11 by 17 inches is suitable) and arrange the cod pieces and onions in the center. Arrange the potato and zucchini slices alternately and slightly overlapping around the fish.

7. Strain the sauce over the fish and vegetables. Sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve hot. This dish is best served immediately, but you may set it aside and reheat it in the oven or on top of the stove.

TAX TIME GOT YOU IN A SQUEEZE?

If tax time puts you in the squeeze, remember, last year the trained specialists at H&R Block took the pressure off for over three-quarters of a million Canadians by preparing accurate income tax returns at an average cost of only $17.75. That's a good return for the money. And a lot less pressure.

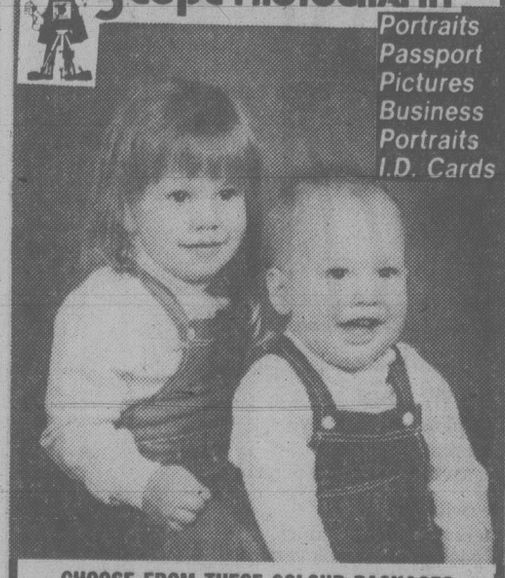

This year be sure.

Cook Irish this week

By KAY SPICER

For all those who hold St. Patrick dear, here's a collection of dishes with a dash of green during "St. Patrick's week." One or two have a touch of the Irish; the others don't. However, they'll all be a reminder that after the celebrations of this past Monday, the lush green of spring should soon be bursting out around us.

LEEK AND POTATO SOUP
Makes about 6 servings

- 3 large leeks
- 2 large potatoes, peeled
- 3 tablespoons butter
- 3 cups water
- 3 chicken bouillon cubes
- 3 tablespoons flour
- Salt and pepper
- Pinch of nutmeg or tarragon
- ½ cup whipping cream (35 per cent)
- Chopped green onions or chives

Cut off leek roots and all but the lightest part of the green tops. The darker green portion is bitter in taste. Slice leeks lengthwise and wash thouroughly. Chop coarsely and combine in a kettle with diced potato. Add water and chicken bouillon cubes. Boil for about 15 minutes or until vegetables are tender. Puree vegetables and cooking liquid, about a cup at a time, in blender jar until fairly smooth. You can also mash them or puree in food processor. Melt butter in the kettle. Gradually stir in flour and continue to stir for a minute or two. Stir in a little of the pureed mixture, stirring until it thickens. Stir in the remaining mixture and bring back to the boil. Season to taste. You can refrigerate or freeze the soup base at this point. Just before serving, heat mixture to the boiling point and stir in cream. Sprinkle individual servings with chopped green onions or chives.

GREEN SALAD BOWL
Makes about 6 servings

- 1 green skinned apple
- Lemon juice or ascorbic acid color keeper
- 6 cups fresh spinach leaves, about half of a 10-oz. package
- 6 romaine lettuce leaves
- ¼ pound Gruyere cheese (optional)
- ¼ pound cooked ham (optional)
- ¼ teaspoon dry mustard
- 3 tablespoons white vinegar
- 2 green onions including the tops, finely chopped
- 1 large garlic clove, crushed
- ⅓ cup olive or vegetable oil
- ⅓ cup sour cream

Core the apple, do not peel. Dice and place in a small bowl. Sprinkle with lemon juice and toss to coat apple pieces. Cover and refrigerate. Wash spinach and drain well. Tear lettuce into bite-size pieces; discard coarse rib. You will need about six cups. Cut cheese and ham into two-inch strips. Cover and refrigerate all these ingredients until serving time. Just before serving blend mustard and vinegar together with a fork in a large salad bowl. Add onion and garlic. Gradually beat in oil until well blended. Stir in the cream and add salt and pepper to taste. Add spinach, lettuce, ham, cheese and apple. Toss well.

IRISH STEW
Makes 6 servings

- 3 pounds lean pork or lamb cubes
- ½ pound side bacon
- 6 medium potatoes
- 10-12 small onions
- 2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
- 1 teaspoon thyme
- 1 teaspoon salt
- Freshly ground black pepper
- 2 cups chicken broth
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 2 tablespoons soft butter

Cut pork or lamb into cubes; cut bacon into 1-inch pieces. Peel potatoes, cut them into slices or chunks. Peel onions, cut in half. Lightly butter a casserole. Arrange ⅓ of the potatoes in a layer on the bottom of the casserole. Cover with a layer of pork, then a layer of bacon and onions. Season with the parsley and thyme, salt and pepper. Repeat layers, seasoning between layers and ending with onions. Pour the broth over ingredients. Cover casserole and cook in a 350° oven for 2 hours until pork is tender or simmer gently for 2 hours. Combine butter and flour together; stir the paste into the casserole. Continue cooking 5 minutes, stirring occasionally, until juice thickens.

LEMON-ALMOND BROCCOLI
Makes 6 servings

You don't need Irish roots to appreciate a hearty Irish stew

- 2 bunches broccoli (2 pounds)
- 1 tablespoon butter (optional)
- ⅓ cup slivered almonds
- 2 tablespoons cornstarch
- 1½ cups water
- Juice and grated peel from 1 lemon
- 1 chicken bouillon cube
- 1 tablespoon granulated sugar
- 1 tablespoon butter

Melt 1 tablespoon butter and cook almonds, stirring constantly, until delicately golden. Remove to paper towels and sprinkle with salt. Prepare lemon sauce in a saucepan by blending cornstarch with a little water to form a smooth paste. Gradually stir in remaining water, lemon juice, peel and bouillon cube. Cook over medium-high heat, stirring constantly, until thickened and fairly clear. Stir in sugar and butter to taste. Arrange drained cooked broccoli on a serving dish. Cover with warm sauce and sprinkle with nuts.

Meat pies for main courses

By BETTY BALSEY
Los Angeles Times

Whether used to recycle leftovers or made from scratch, meat pies can be tasty main dishes for winter meals. Succulent bits of meat or poultry hidden between pastry covers or underneath simple toppings, such as mashed potatoes or cornmeal mush, can be flavored in a remarkable number of ways. In Pastel de Fuente, a deep-dish meat pie, ground beef is the basis of the filling, but instead of the usual seasonings one associates with beef, raisins, olives and hard-cooked eggs are added. Finally, the mixture is ringed with swirls of mashed potatoes. The result is an interesting dinner pie with a Middle Eastern flavor.

Dieter's friend

Few foods are as nutritious for so few calories and are as relatively inexpensive as cottage cheese. It is also one of the most calorie-cheap sources of high-quality complete protein there is. A cupful of low-fat or uncreamed cottage cheese (99 per cent fat-free) ranges between 125 and 172 calories yet it contains about 25 grams of protein, more than half your daily requirement.

PASTEL de FUENTE
(Deep-Dish Beef Pie)

½ onion, finely chopped
1 tablespoon oil or shortening
2 pounds ground beef
2 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
6 green olives, chopped
½ cup raisins
2 teaspoons sugar
Salt, pepper
1 pound potatoes, cooked and mashed
2 teaspoons butter or margarine

Cook onion in oil until golden. Add beef and cook 10 minutes over medium heat, stirring to keep crumbly. Mix in eggs, olives and raisins. Add sugar and season with salt and pepper to taste. Place meat mixture in a large baking dish and cover with a thick layer of mashed potatoes. Dot potatoes with butter. Bake at 300 degrees 30 minutes. Serves 8.

STEAK AND KIDNEY PIE

2 pounds beef chuck
1 pound lamb, veal or beef kidneys
¼ cup butter or margarine
1 medium onion, coarsely chopped
1 cup beef stock
Salt, pepper
Dash cayenne
½ teaspoon mixed herbs
Flour
Flaky pastry or puff paste
1 egg yolk

Cut meat into 1 1-2 inch cubes. Quarter kidney lengthwise and then crosswise. Melt butter in a large kettle, add onion and cook over medium heat until onion is lightly browned. Add beef cubes and kidney and brown well, stirring most of the time. Add beef stock, salt and pepper to taste, cayenne and herbs. Stir, cover and simmer 2 hours or until meat is tender. If necessary add more beef stock after meat is done for gravy. Thicken liquid with one to two tablespoons flour mixed to a paste with water.

Turn mixture into an earthenware or glass casserole and allow to cool. Cover cooled mixture with pastry, sealing edges to dish. Cut vents in pastry to allow steam to escape. Arrange pastry leaves on top, if desired. Brush pastry with lightly beaten egg yolk and bake at 450 degrees 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 375 degrees and bake 15 minutes longer, or until crust is browned. Makes 6 servings.

BEEF BATTER PIE

1½ pounds ground beef
¼ cup minced onion
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
¼ teaspoon pepper
⅛ teaspoon cloves
2 teaspoons salt
1½ cups sifted flour
1½ cups milk
3 eggs

Brown beef and onion, season with garlic powder, pepper, cloves and one and one-half teaspoons salt. Remove from heat and drain off fat. Sift flour with remaining one-half teaspoon salt. Add milk and stir until smooth. Beat in eggs one at a time. Place well-greased 10-inch skillet in 400-degree oven until sizzling. Pour half of batter in skillet, cover with beef mixture, then add remaining batter. Return to oven for 20 to 25 minutes. Cut in wedges to serve. Makes four to six servings.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

1. UPLANDS SEAVIEWS
A truly outstanding character residence combining classic tudor styling with a superb Uplands location. The 1.2-acre site is beautifully landscaped, with circular driveway winding through the mature garden. Inside the stately oak panelled reception hall opens to the gracious living room, formal dining room; both with commanding 180 degree views of the water. A large, bright kitchen, charming den and guest powder room complete the main floor. The open staircase leads to four large bedrooms, all with access to ensuites; the master bedroom enjoys magnificent views, generous closet and dressing room areas. The high, bright basement is extremely usable, with billiard room, full bath and potential for much more. Seldom does such a unique property combining so many exceptional features become available for purchase.

2. UPLANDS INDOOR POOL
A unique residence featuring excellent family accommodation. It combines the subtle grace of soft beige carpets, grasscloth, dark oak parquet and old brick arches, yet lends itself to the lifestyle of an active family. Just a few of the features: huge family kitchen, separate formal dining room, den with fireplace, living room overlooking the pool, master suite with private access to sauna and pool, family room, playroom. Four bedrooms plus inlaw or staff suite. The pool enclosure is fabulous, with vaulted, sky-lit ceiling, barbecue, and a 44 ft. long glass windowed wall which opens to the patio giving an "outdoor" feeling for summer swimming. Exceptional at $345,000. For further details on this and other Upland properties call:

3. SOUTH OAK BAY RUNNYMEDE
Very few new homes on the market today offer everything a family needs — comfort, size, quiet location. This one does. 2800 sq. ft. give such a spacious feeling, and the floor plan really works. Main has sunken living room, 19' dining room, large kitchen with attached family room and breakfast area, with a den (fireplace) bath and laundry room completing the plan. A gracious, open staircase leads to the three bedrooms, plus a 30 foot unfinished playroom. The master has a huge walk-in closet study alcove and a massive ensuite with jacuzzi. There is an extra height, double garage. Immense charm and character yet less than one year old. Offered at $195,000. EXCLUSIVE.

4. ROCKLAND TUDOR
OPEN SAT. 1:30-4:00
1523 SHASTA PLACE
Situated amid lovely, mature grounds, on this desirable Rockland cul-de-sac is a particularly attractive, nine-year-old residence, offering four plus bedrooms, 3½ baths, den, kitchen with built-ins, and attached family room with fireplace. The decor is warm and luxurious with extensive use of grasscloth and rich wall to wall. The finish is superb including beamed ceilings, wainscotting, leaded windows and panelled doors throughout and more. Offered at $162,500.00. Don't miss our OPEN HOUSE SATURDAY 1:30-4:00.

The Lord is my Shepherd

I shall not want

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures

He restoreth my soul

He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake

Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death

I will fear no evil

For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff
they comfort me

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies

Thou anointest my head with oil

My cup runneth over

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

God in his wisdom has recalled

The boon
his love had given

And though the body slumbers here

The soul is safe in heaven.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

The gratitude in our hearts can never be fully expressed, to our many relatives and friends for their kind messages, flowers and assistance during the sudden loss of our dear daughter, Shannon Darnell Conners. Thankyou to the pallbearers, Rev. Hunter and Sands Funeral Chapel for their unselfish services. — Thelma and Art Cain and families.

I WISH TO EXPRESS MY APpreciation to all our friends for their many ways of showing their affection and thoughtfullness at the passing of my husband, Louis Attringer.

309 IN MEMORIAM

BEATTIE - Arthur Roy, husband and father, March, 19, '79
Deep in the heart lies a picture,
Of a loved one laid to rest,
In memory's frame we shall keep it,
Because he was one of the best.
Lovingly remembered by wife, Audrey, daughters Karen and Beverley and son Arthur and families

DEVINE — Charles, in memory of a wonderful friend who passed away suddenly March 19, 1979.
Silent memories true and tender,
Just to show we still remember.
The Sloan, Kimmerly, Douglas and Reid families.

DEVINE — IN memory of Charlie who passed away suddenly March 19, 1979.
Gone from us your smiling face,
The heart that won so many friends,
In happy by gone days..
The years may change many things,
But this they change never.
The memory of those happy days,
Then we were all together.
Sadly missed by Ada, Alan, Holley and Bill Dee.

TATE - In loving memory of my dear Grandmother, Grace Tate, passed away March 19, 1979.
They say time heals all sorrows,
And helps us to forget,
But time so far has only proven
How much I miss her, yet
Your presence I miss,
Your memory I treasure.
Loving you always—
Forgetting you never.
Sadly missed by her granddaughter, Debbie.

TATE — Grace. In ever loving memory of my dear wife, Grace who departed this life on March 19, 1979.
Your spirit still is with me
We two will never part
Until the time we meet again
You're always in my heart
Sorrily missed but fondly remembered by your ever loving husband, John and children, Sylvia, Jeannette, John and Barry. Also her grandchildren, a son-in-law and daughter-in-law.

It's time to start tomato seeds indoors gardening

hilda beastall

With this week's new moon, general weather conditions should be just right for starting tomato seeds in the warmth of a slightly heated glassed-in sunroom. Or in a greenhouse or a warm sunny windowsill. For this project the green plastic miniature greenhouse described here recently is ideal. Or recycle small-size milk cans that have been save for seed sowing.

Sow two seeds in each division of the mini greenhouse or in each small can. The strongest of each two will be left growing without disturbing its roots. This is an advantage when growing without the perfect environment of a heated greenhouse.

The aim with growing a few tomato plants for planting later in one's own garden (or balcony garden or allotment) is to keep them strong, with no check in growth. They will then be making their first flowers by the time outdoor night temperatures are around 15 deg. In the cooler parts of Greater Victoria it is sometimes early June.

With the plants transferred to six-inch containers for the last six weeks before planting outdoors, they will produce early ripe fruits around July 26, according to variety and the weather of the year.

In this general area of slow summer starting it is a good idea to grow bush types of tomatoes in place of staking varieties, which must first reach their height before flowering and fruiting.

Bush varieties make first flowers on tip growth at around 20 or 25 cms. This is why first ripe fruits are often ready for picking by late July, followed by side branch fruits throughout August into September. Seldom are green fruits remaining in more than a token quantity when the first killing frost arrives.

Among bush varieties grown in recent years with these desirable results have been Fireball, Coldset, and Spitfire. Amateur was a bush type from England around 30 years, recommended for glass cloche growing.

It succeeded here well, both under cloches and in the open, continuing flowering and fruiting into fall weather right up to hard frost. The seed has now reappeared in a local seedsman's list.

A reader has this year recommended the Early Cascade tomato, a tall staking variety which gave him ripe fruits August 23 last year. This would be good in a sheltered but warm sunny garden to save space by staking to a single stem, and propping up a couple of strong side growths to carry later fruits, the reader suggests. We shall give it a trial.

Bush types are allowed to develop about four side shoots. Others are rubbed out after a good set of fruits seems assured. Watch must be kept for flower clusters which appear on stems too. They are to give the big crops we expect from these bush tomatoes.

Sow two tomato seeds in each small container, making labels for each if using more than one variety.

Have the soil damp but not wet, either in the miniature greenhouse or in other containers, cover with clear plastic or with drinking glassed upended as covers over the seeds. Keep in warm place go germinate; then into light, turning frequently to prevent spindling.

The first true leaves should be seen between the two seed leaves when the stems are 10 to 12 mm high.Covers are then removed. When seedlings have been sown in groups of more than two, the groups must be separated for planting singly into small containers.

Never overwater. Don't allow wilting for more than an hour at most.

The young roots need moisture and air for development. The air is only possible if the soil is allowed to become slightly dry once daily among the surface particles.

Vine ripened tomatoes in summer are worth whatever attention we need to give the plants. And they can be grown wherever there is sun and warmth during the summer — on patio, balacony, in tiny dooryard plots, in sunny garden beds or in allotment gardens.

Rhodesia labor unrest

Times News Services

SALISBURY — Marxist Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's first domestic headache — an outbreak of black labor unrest — came as he took over the office once used by his defeated foes.

The labor ministry reported the unrest Tuesday when Mugabe moved into the official prime minister's office and presided over his cabinet's first meeting.

The ministry said work stoppages had taken place or were under way at six leading firms — most of them dealing in textiles — in Salisbury and the southwestern city of Bulawayo.

Witnesses reported that at one factory workers went on strike after hanging a placard on the gate demanding higher wages and new overalls.

At another, strike organizers complained of low pay and accused a white manager of spitting at a black worker.

Labor Minister Kumbirai Kangai urged the workers to end their strikes for higher pay and obey the labor laws, all of them promulgated by governments that Mugabe's guerrillas fought to bring down.

The laws say strikes can take place if preceded by negotiations.

Government sources said initial reports indicated some 4,000 workers were involved in the strikes. While the unrest was not of crisis proportions, it was the worst labor trouble in Rhodesia since the 1950s.

The average industrial worker's wage is $105 U.S. dollars per month.

Kangai said the unrest was sparked by a rumor that Mugabe's government would nationalize the pension funds to which the workers have contributed.

"I wish to strongly refute this rumor," he said.

Just as Mugabe promised white civil servants their pensions were safe, "I now give a categorical assurance that all moneys paid into pension funds by workers are fully safeguarded," Kangai said.

He asked the workers to wait until the government works out new industrial policies.

Mugabe's government is to take power officially April 18 when Rhodesia ceases to be a British colony and becomes the independent nation of Zimbabwe.

Police 'cowards' fired

DETROIT (UPI) — Two women police officers fired for cowardice because they failed to come to the aid of a fellow officer attacked by a naked man plan to appeal the Police Department trial board ruling, their attorney said Tuesday.

The findings against Katherine Perkins and Glenda Rudolph marked the first time in department history two officers have been fired for cowardice.

Cmdr. Ronald Green, head of a three-member police trial board, said the officers were found guilty of "shirking (their) duty or responsibility during a time of danger."

The trial board investigation began after Sgt. Paul Janness told his superiors at the 13th Precinct the women failed to help him fight off a naked man who attacked him last Aug. 26.

Four of five new witnesses to the incident, who came forth after the hearing began in January, said the policewomen did nothing to help Janness.

Rudolph said she did not go to Janness' aid because she saw him make a motion with his hand and interpreted it to mean he did not want help.

Feldman said an appeal would be filed within 20 days.

New M-19 demand: free 28

Times News Services

BOGOTA — Guerrillas holding 32 hostages in the Dominican Republic Embassy have given the government a "non-negotiable" list of 28 prisoners to be freed in exchange for the hostages, Foreign Minister Diego Uribe Vargas announced Tuesday night.

In a nationwide television address, he also repeated the government's stand that it will not free any prisoner, saying such a move would violate the constitution.

Uribe Vargas' statement was the first official confirmation that the M-19 guerrillas had backed away from their original demand that 311 "political prisoners" be freed.

For the hostagess, including U.S. Ambassador Diego Asencio and 12 other diplomats of ambassadorial rank, Tuesday marked their third week as hostages.

Earlier, Colombian President Julio Cesar Turbay Ayala said in an interview that his government will not give in to "blackmail," despite extreme pressure from some of the governments whose envoys or nationals are being held hostage.

The M-19, Turbay said, "evidently thought that with this act they could destroy the Colombian government ... finish it off and get all they wanted in a way that would tremendously strengthen terrorist groups everywhere.

"My impression is that they calculated badly."

Pope boosts Latin in mass

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Taking the side of Roman Catholic traditionalists, Pope John Paul on Tuesday gave a major boost to the use of Latin in the mass and warned against interpreting the second Vatican ecumenical council's reforms too freely.

In a 50-page letter to the world's Roman Catholic bishops, the pontiff specifically banned the reading of unauthorized texts for the mass and demanded that priests wear proper vestments for the service.

The Polish-born Pope, who has taken a strict constructionist view of Roman Catholic Church teachings on such matters as celibacy, birth control and homosexuality, condemned the "widespread tendency, at least in some places, to desacralize everything."

Hijack loot discovery lands boy's dad in jail

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — When 8-year-old Brian Ingram found $5,000 along the banks of the Columbia River last month, he added a piece to the puzzle of what happened to hijacker D.B. Cooper and the $200,000 ransom he had when parachuting out of the jet in 1971.

The boy's find also helped put his dad in jail.

Brian's father, Harold Dwayne, 28, was released night after being arrested on an Oklahoma warrant for allegedly leaving that state with mortgaged property — a car.

Police recognized Ingram in news photographs in which he was shown beaming proudly with his son. He faces up to seven years in prison.

Second hostel fire in as many days

Times News Services

LONDON — Firemen rescued eight destitute men from a blazing London hostel today just 24 hours after nine women perished in a fire at another refuge for the homeless.

Four of the rescued were treated for smoke inhalation and shock, but there were no fatalities, authorities said. The blaze severely damaged the East End Mission hostel for men in Aldgate, a rundown cockney district.

Fire officials said arson was not suspected.

Tuesday's fire was at a Roman Catholic hostel in Kilburn, in north London, run by nuns of the Missionaries of Charity, the order founded by Mother Teresa of Calcutta, winner of a Nobel Peace Prize.

Charred bodies of eight of the victims were found trapped on the top floor of the Kilburn hostel and fire officials later questioned fire prevention standards at the brick building.

The nuns who ran the hostel claim they did not receive instructions from fire authorities on fire safety measures that may have averted the tragedy.

Fire authorities said Tuesday they had recommended on Feb. 4 the installation of fire fighting equipment for the hostel.

Soviets strongly deny germ-war test charges

Times News Services

MOSCOW — The Soviet foreign ministry today denounced as the "latest fabrication of American propaganda" a U.S. state department suggestion that a lethal biological warfare agent killed citizens last year in the Soviet city of Sverdlovsk.

A foreign ministry spokesman said the state department's assertion was "obviously slander" and said "there is no basis for such assertions."

He recalled that the Soviet Union signed the treaty banning the use and production of biological warfare agents and said Moscow "strictly observes the treaty."

State department spokesman David Passage told reporters in Washington Tuesday there had been "disturbing indications" that an outbreak of disease in Sverdlovsk "may have resulted from the inadvertent exposure of large numbers of people to some sort of lethal biological agent."

Passage said the United States has asked the Soviet government for an explanation because both have signed an agreement banning biological weapons.

Passage said the United States is not yet charging that the agreement has been violated but "intends to pursue this matter as vigorously as the facts warrant."

He spoke of an outbreak of disease following inadvertent exposure of Soviet civilians to lethal biological agents at Sverdlovsk, a steel-producing city of about one million people in the Ural mountains about 1,609 kilometres east of Moscow.

He said the U.S. information about the Sverdlovsk incident had been compiled over a period of time by intelligence experts.

The intelligence reports reportedly confirmed an explosion at a Soviet research facility near Sverdlovsk last spring in which heavy concentrations of deadly anthrax bacteria were scattered over a wide, heavily populated area.

The intelligence reports estimate that between 200 and 300 Russian civilians died in the aftermath of the explosion.

The U.S. recently felt it has sufficient information to approach the Soviet Union about its concern, and is awaiting a response, Passage said.

Coincidentally, a widely distributed U.S. government publication Tuesday reprinted British and West German news reports of separate Soviet accidents said to involve bacteriological weapons and causing thousands of fatal illnesses.

One reprint was based on an account appearing in the British news magazine NOW last October which said thousands of people became fatally ill following a June accident at a Soviet bacteriological weapons factory at Novosibirsk, a city of 1.4 million.

The magazine said the Soviet Union might have been experimenting with a deadly virus which could be spread in the air, or a chemical agent that was released in an explosion.

The Soviet Union and the United States, along with 85 other countries, are signatories to the Biological Warfare Convention which went into effect in 1975.

Passage said the United States also has asked the Soviet Union about continuing news reports that Soviet forces have used toxic gas weapons in Afghanistan, but that this is a separate matter.

The U.S. Foreign Broadcast Information Service, which monitors radio and newspaper reports abroad, reprinted news accounts of accidents at the Novosibirsk and another at Kashino.

Anthrax is an infectious disease borne by cud-chewing animals and transmittable to humans when its spores are inhaled. Symptoms include painful, festering skin lesions. In acute cases, anthrax can be fatal in one to two days.

The disease now is rare in the U.S.

The anthrax-causing bacteria was among the biological agents in the U.S. stockpile when the United States renounced the use of biological warfare in 1969.

Iranian prisoners sprung by Khomeini

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Scores of Iranians lined up outside the gates of Tehran's Evin prison today awaiting the release of friends and relatives granted amnesty as political prisoners in a surprise New Year's gesture by Ayatollah Khomeini.

About 100 persons convicted by the revolutionary courts of various crimes in support of the regime of the deposed shah were to be released immediately and another 100 within several days.

Khomeini's announcement said all those linked to the previous regime with the exception of persons convicted of murder, torture and plundering the nation's wealth would be freed.

"On the eve of the New Year (beginning Friday according to the traditional Iranian calendar) I forgive all SAVAK agents, military convicts and pseudo-clergy who are not involved in those cases."

Khomeini's revolutionary guards have arrested several thousand persons since seizing power early last year and hundreds have been executed for supporting the shah's policies.

Khomeini's announcement appeared to be aimed at restoring confidence in the government's authority and at heading off unrest in the armed forces.

In another development, Iran's ruling Revolutionary Council has appointed a committee to investigate growing complaints of vote-rigging in post-revolutionary Iran's first parliamentary elections.

The Revolutionary Council's decision on investigating the election was announced four days after the first-round voting ended, with the front-running clerical Islamic Republican Party under increasing attack as the principal — but far from only — culprit in allegedly widespread irregularities.

The painfully slow vote counting, which appears to have decelerated with every passing day, now shows Islamic Republican candidates accounting for a little less than two-thirds of the 70-odd outright victors who won the required absolute majority in the election's first round.

Some 100 of the 270 seats are to be decided in a runoff vote in early April, and the results of the reminder have yet to be announced.

Meanwhile, the Revolutionary Guards announced the arrest of Foreign Ministry employee Victoria Bassiri on charges of spying for American diplomat William Daughtery in return for $300 a month.

Daugherty, one of 50 U.S. hostages here, stands accused of working for the Central Intelligence Agency by the militant Islamic students who have occupied the U.S. embassy since Nov. 4.

At the International Court of Justice in The Hague, the United States charged today that a Moslem interrogator pointed a revolver at an American woman hostage in Tehran, told her one chamber was loaded then pulled the trigger repeatedly.

U.S. State Department legal advisor Robert B. Owen made the charge as part of the U.S. application for an order to release the 50 American captives.

Owen said hostages were often threatened at gunpoint, tied to upright chairs for up to 16 hours, made to sleep on bare concrete floors and kept blindfolded as punishment in the first weeks of the crisis, now in its 137th day.

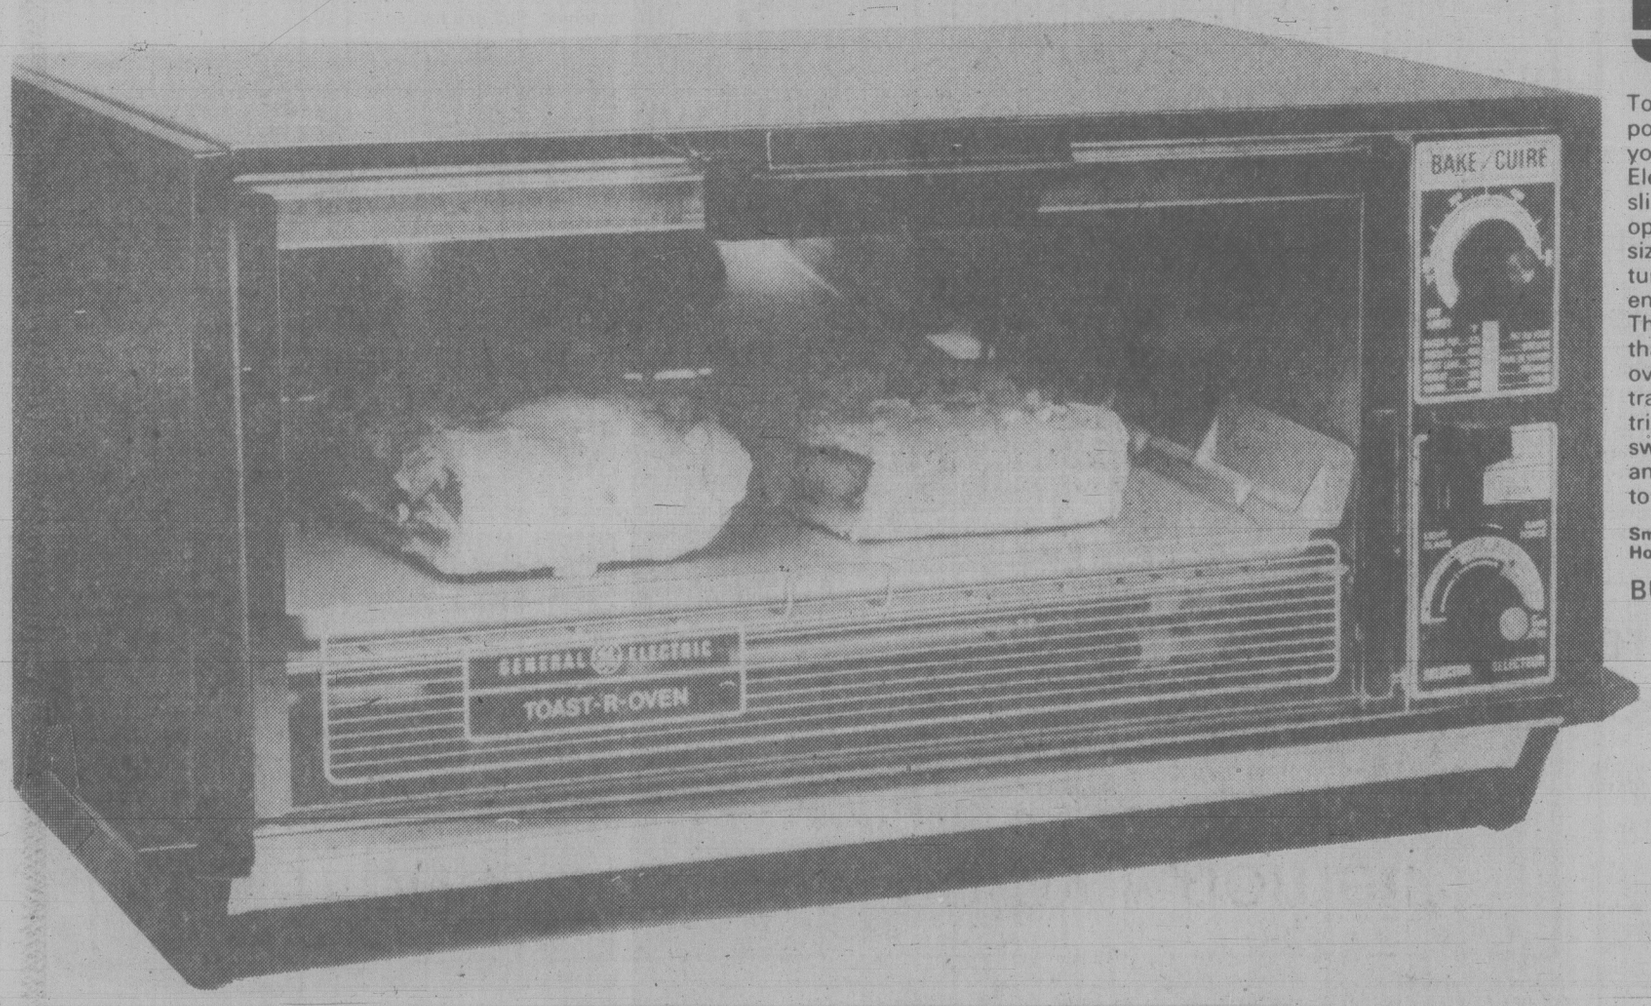

Princess set to visit west

Toasters have changed since the first pop-up toaster appeared in 1926. Now you can do three jobs with General Electric's Toast-R-Oven. It toasts three slices of bread to perfection. Top browns open face sandwiches. Bakes smaller sized items you normally would have to turn on your oven to cook — so you save energy too.
The Toast-R-Oven is a lot easier to clean than your oven. Take out the easy-remove oven rack and tray and clean. A crumb tray catches toast crumbs. General Electric's Toast-R-Oven features an on/off switch to signal when your toast is ready and oven thermostat control from 200 F to 500 F. In chrome and black detail.

What you should know about buying Toast-R-Ovens

As any toast gourmet knows, the true test of a toaster is in the toasting. For example, English muffins, when toasted in a conventional toaster, toast unevenly. Too dark on the outside, too light in the centre. The Toast-R-Oven toasts all muffins, buns and thick slices of homemade bread to an even, golden brown. No sticking or burning.

Fares going up on all ferries to Island

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It's going to cost more to get off Vancouver Island by sea this year no matter which route you choose.

The Victoria-Seattle ferry will be more expensive when the service starts up in mid-May, Ald. Bob Wright said Tuesday.

And tourists will also have to pay more on Washington State ferries, which operates the Anacortes-Sidney ferry service.

It announced a general 25 per cent increase on all routes today.

Black Ball Transport Inc., which runs the Coho to Port Angeles year-round, said today it is also planning a rate hike to take effect in May, but it probably won't be as high as Washington state ferries' increase.

And the B.C. Ferry Corp. has asked the provincial cabinet to approve a rate increase of $2 or $3 for vehicles. And there are strong indications a hike will be approved.

Rising fuel and labor costs are the main reasons officials give for the increased fares.

Last season it cost $13 one-way and $21 return for foot passengers on the Princess Marguerite.

Wright didn't say what the new fare structure will be.

"A small fare increase is quite likely," is all he will say.

The Anacortes-Sidney run now costs $16.95 for a car and driver one-way and $3.95 for passengers.

The new rats haven't been worked out yet but a 25 per cent hike will bring those figures to around $20.20 and $5.

The Coho now charges $16.25 Canadian for a car and driver travelling one-way across Juan de Fuca Strait, and $4.65 for a passenger.

The local manager said the percentage increase is still being determined, but it probably will be less than the state ferries' 25 per cent.

Wright, a newly-appointed director of the B.C. Steamship Co. which operates the service, also confirmed that the replacement vessel for the Marguerite will not carry vehicles.

Thus the modifications to the Queen of Prince Rupert will cost $550,000 less than the $1.5 million original estimate.

The first plan had Burrard-Yarrows cutting a hole in her side to accommodate cars, as the dock in Seattle takes only side-loading vessels.

Wright also said the Rupert will make only one trip a day until June, when two round trips will probably have to be offered to meet the demand.

The Boeing hydrofoil planned to augment the Rupert should be in service by May 1, two weeks before the Rupert is due to start.

By the end of June, Wright said there should be two daily sailings by the 800-passenger Rupert and three round trips on the 250-passenger hydrofoil.

No fares have been set for the hydrofoil, which will make the trip in half the usual four hours it took the Marguerite, but Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele says it will probably be around $20 to $25 one way.

MD's goof then years of misery

By PAT DUFOUR

A Times story and picture last week on a Seattle woman who walked around for five years with a large surgical clamp in her abdomen made Stephen Woloshyn sit up and take notice.

Woloshyn, of 220 Kamloops, was interested because for 30 years he went through agony with an undetected surgical blade inside his nose.

Woloshyn's told the Times his problems began when he was serving with the Royal Canadian Artillery during the Second World War.

Suffering from sinusitis, he was admitted to the military hospital — now Camosun College — and had surgery.

The major who performed the operation is still practising as an eye, throat and ear specialist, according to Woloshyn.

But Woloshyn says the cost of a civil suit is beyond his means.

He has been unable to get copies of the x-rays for his personal evidence.

Woloshyn says it wasn't long after the initial operation before he began to have fresh problems with his nose and he says he spent a fortune on medications that did no good.

"Then I had a terrible attack in the spring of 1976. I was seeing my doctor and I was on medication but not progressing at all," he says.

His doctor ordered x-rays and it was then the surgical blade was spotted.

Some of the metal had corroded, adding the danger of poison.

The infection had also spread to one eye and an ear.

The blade was finally removed by surgery in July, 1976.

"My recovery was very bad. I wasn't doing too well at all," Woloshyn says.

He had more surgery in September of that year.

"It was months before I really recovered from that."

Woloshyn says he is still under treatment and now receives a small disability pension from the department of veterans' affairs.

But the pension, he claims, is completely inadequate for the pain and financial burden he has had and still suffers.

He said he appeared before a review board in December and his pension was increased slightly.

Woloshun isn't giving up though and hopes to win yet another increase.

"I have one more step to go and that's the final review board."

Mortgage aid: Ottawa plays it very cool

Times News Services

Skyrocketing interest rates are obviously creating great problems for homeowners but an aid program may be too expensive now, says Finance Minister Allan MacEachen.

The extent to which oil revenues flow to Ottawa will determine whether homeowners will get any relief, MacEachen said.

MacEachen said at a news conference following a 75-minute meeting with Ontario Treasurer Frank Miller and Ontario Housing Minister Claude Bennett that he "would not hook it directly to the Alberta-Canada negotiations," but the revenues would have to come from somewhere.

"You know the size of the deficit and that hasn't gone away."

The federal deficit reached $11 billion last year.

"Any possible program will have to be judged in relation to its cost but as of the moment, we haven't reached any decisions."

MacEachen said his officials are closely monitoring interest rates.

"No, I haven't reached the conclusion that something must be done," said MacEachen when asked if he had to take action to aid homeowners. "I have to know what that something is and what it will cost before I regard it as inevitable."

Miller said he urged MacEachen to consider aid for homeowners to allow them to keep their homes. But, he said, the federal finance minister was a "real pro" by not giving him any assurance that federal help was imminent.

Bennett warned that if the federal and provincial governments do not help mortgage holders, the costs will eventually come back in terms of subsidies for those who must rent accommodation.

"If we don't move on (interest rate) subsidies, then we will see those people who had to give up their homes back in the rental markets," he said. "If that happens, we'll have to pay anyway."

In Ottawa, the Consumers Association of Canada warned Tuesday that high interest rates have placed both those wanting to buy houses and those renegotiating mortgages in an "intolerable" situation.

The organization, in a letter to MacEachen, said that the Bank of Canada's new policy of letting inter-

Sorters sort of upset

Those loud wails are from the guys who sort the mail.

In this case, the mail sorters of the Glanford mail processing plant.

Their mid-month overtime cheques which should have been delivered Mar. 15, are either lost or delayed somewhere in the mail.

And the sorters are sort of upset.

So upset that the word this morning was that they were considering walking off the job.

Plan manager Ducan Brooks said if the sorters walk off, finding the cheques might be a bit of a problem.

Brooks said: "We haven't really lost the mail."

He said the cheques weren't printed until last Friday and he doesn't know what day they were put in the mail.

But Peter De Belle, vice-president of the Victoria local of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, said he's heard the overtime work sheet was lost in a move between two offices in Ottawa and didn't turn up until last Wednesday.

Vancouver has worst problem

VANCOUVER (CP) — Greater Vancouver has the most serious housing shortage problem in North America, says a study released Tuesday by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

And Victoria and Vancouver ranked first and second in Canada for the lowest vacancy rate.

The study was conducted by the corporation's B.C. regional office in co-operation with the U.S. department of housing and urban development.

And a survey by the Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver shows housing prices in Greater Vancouver on average jumped a full seven per cent in the first eight weeks of 1980.

The corporation also said that:

—B.C. housing starts set a record in February — 2,137 units — with the most coming in multiple units.

—Increases in new house prices in Vancouver in 1979 were the highest in Canada.

The study on housing shortages looked at all cities with more than one million residents. Vancouver beat other tight markets such as Miami and Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Denver, Colo., and Dallas, Tex.

The corporation cited several reasons for the results.

Included are a rapid rise in both new and existing house prices; rental buildings being rented prior to completion; near zero apartment vacancies; more new single-detached housing being absorbed by the market and near low levels of inventories of all types of housing, with only 130 units in the multiple category available in Greater Vancouver at the beginning of February.

The report notes that few parcels of land are available for development within easy commuting distance to downtown.

National parks hike camp fees

OTTAWA (CP) — It will cost campers at least 33 per cent more to pitch a tent in any of Canada's 28 national parks this summer.

Parks Canada announced Tuesday it will increase camping and recreational fees April 1, the first such increase since 1975.

The fee hikes are necessary to keep pace with higher operating costs and to bring rates for national parks in line with those charged in private parks, a spokesman explained.

Daily camping fees will jump to $4.50 from $3 in a campground with standard services, to $7 from $5 for a campsite equipped with individual electricity outlets and to $8 from $6 for a site with individual electricity, sewer and water outlets. A $3 fee is also being introduced for unserviced camping areas.

Fees for use of facilities such as golf courses, tennis courts and boat dockings will also go up.

Motor vehicle entrance fees, introduced in 1975, will remain at $10 for an annual permit valid for all parks, $2 for a four-day permit and $1 for one day.

Vogel denies charges

Deputy Attorney-General Dick Vogel today denied he has ever interfered with the justice process and said he is suing the CBC and reporter Chris Bird for libel.

In his first statement since he took a leave of absence from his post, Vogel said: "I categorically and vehemently deny the allegations made about me in the CBC program.

"At no time have I improperly performed mny duties nor have I been influenced by improper motives.

"In three cases, the CBC accused me of influencing the course of justice to help friends and associates. This is not true. Any actions I took were in the course of discharging my public duties and acting in the interst of the community as a whole," Vogel said.

Vogel asked for and was granted a leave of absence while Attorney-General Allan Williams completes an investigation into the CBC program's claims.

Hydro bills to bear transit tax

By PAT DUFOUR

It's official — starting April 1, Capital Regional District taxpayers will pay an extra $1 per household on their Hydro bills to cover a predicted public transit deficit of $2.2 million.

And in spite of angry opposition, Salt Spring Islanders will have to cough up the cash, too — at least for the first year the CRD runs the buses.

Ken Arnott, chairman of Salt Spring Island's transport committee, and fellow islander Dr. Leonard Kreissl, a member of the Islands Trust, appeared before the CRD's transit planning committee today to ask that Salt Spring Island be excluded from the transit area.

But they were told by regional board chairman Jim Campbell that agreements have been signed that include Salt Spring Island.

Campbell advised them to wait until they can assess if better transit service is forthcoming.

He said when he comes to Victoria, he has to leave Saturna Island by 6:40 a.m. and it takes until 11 a.m. for him to reach downtown Victoria if he goes by bus.

Committee chairman Norma Sealey told Arnott and Kreissl that the service being planned for the future will provide buses to Swartz Bay every 60 minutes with a 30-minute service during peak periods.

CRD directors were delighted with Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm's statement Tuesday that cabinet had given its approval to the CRD proposal for a Hydro surcharge.

"We really have no alternative but to accept their proposal," Vander Zalm admitted.

"There's no time left, nor can they agree on any other approach."

Vander Zalm said the government had accepted the CRD proposal and will simply negotiate the details.

The minister said his colleagues was not 100 per cent happy with the Hydro surcharge.

"But I guess they reason that with the reduction in the sales tax (on Hydro bills) they can fairly impose this charge because it won't make much difference to the property owners."

In other business, the committee was told by Larry Miller, assistant general manager of the Urban Transit Authority (UTA) that the human resources ministry has agreed to purchase passes for senior citizens who now receive special $5 bus passes.

Miller said the ministry has agreed to pay $50 a year for each pass to the UTA, providing an estimated $250,000 for its transit budget.

Miller said the ministry had agreed that restrictions on pass use during off-peak hours and restriction to single zone would be acceptable.

The ministry will be the authority to decide how much the bus passes will cost in future.

Copycats, put your fee in the kitty

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Before long Canadians may have to get a licence to operate a photocopying machine and pay royalties to authors every time they borrow a book from the library.

Those are two of a number of recommendations being considered by members of a special committee of the federal consumer and corporate affairs department charged with updating Canada's copyright laws.

Frank Keyes, an Ottawa lawyer and special adviser to the government on copyright matters, said in an interview the revisions are bound to have a far-reaching impact on the ways copy-mad Canadians copy or use the works of others.

Keyes said under existing laws everyone is supposed to have exclusive rights to the things they produce.

It makes no difference if the creation is a book, play, painting, musical score, photograph, film, sound recording, or even a letter home to mother or a child's stickman drawing.

The creation belongs solely to the creator — or if he is employed, then his employer — and technically, no one can use or copy the material without permission or payment of fees.

Needless to say, Keyes lamented, the law is broken countless times daily.

And the people who make their living from their artistic endeavors are angry.

They want a fairer deal and Keyes said he can't blame them.

He said the problem is that while the law already has broad protections, it is unchanged since 1924 and fails to take into account technological developments since.

The law says nothing about sound films, long-playing records, video-tapes, photocopying machines, computer banks or satellite communications.

And because it doesn't, there is confusion and dissension about how far copyrights extend.

Keyes said authors and publishers have been pressing the government for action in the one area where they feel there is the greatest amount of infringement — photocopying.

They would like to form a collective to licence owners of photocopying machines.

The ramifactions would be extensive, especially in the school system, Keyes said, but the licences would give authors at least some compensation for their material that is copied.

Keyes said there is pressure for new rights to be incorporated in the copyright laws.

For example, authors want a public lending right whereby they'd receive payment every time one of their books is borrowed from a library.

Such a system already exists in 10 countries including Australia, Sweden, New Zealand and Germany.

Performers also want protection from someone copying their act. At present there is none.

Artists are seeking a droit de suite or following right which would entitle them to a share of the profits if a work they sold subsequently increases in value. Such is the case in Germany, Belgium and France.

Film producers are looking for copyright protection to prevent videotaping of films unless a royalty is paid first.

There is also a move to have cablevision companies start paying royalties for the films and programs they air.

Composers are asking for an increase in the royalties that they are entitled to by copyright licence.

The licence says composers are to receive two cents a side per record. But the fee was set in 1924 when there were only 78s. When long-plays came along the licence was interpreted to mean two cents for each tune.

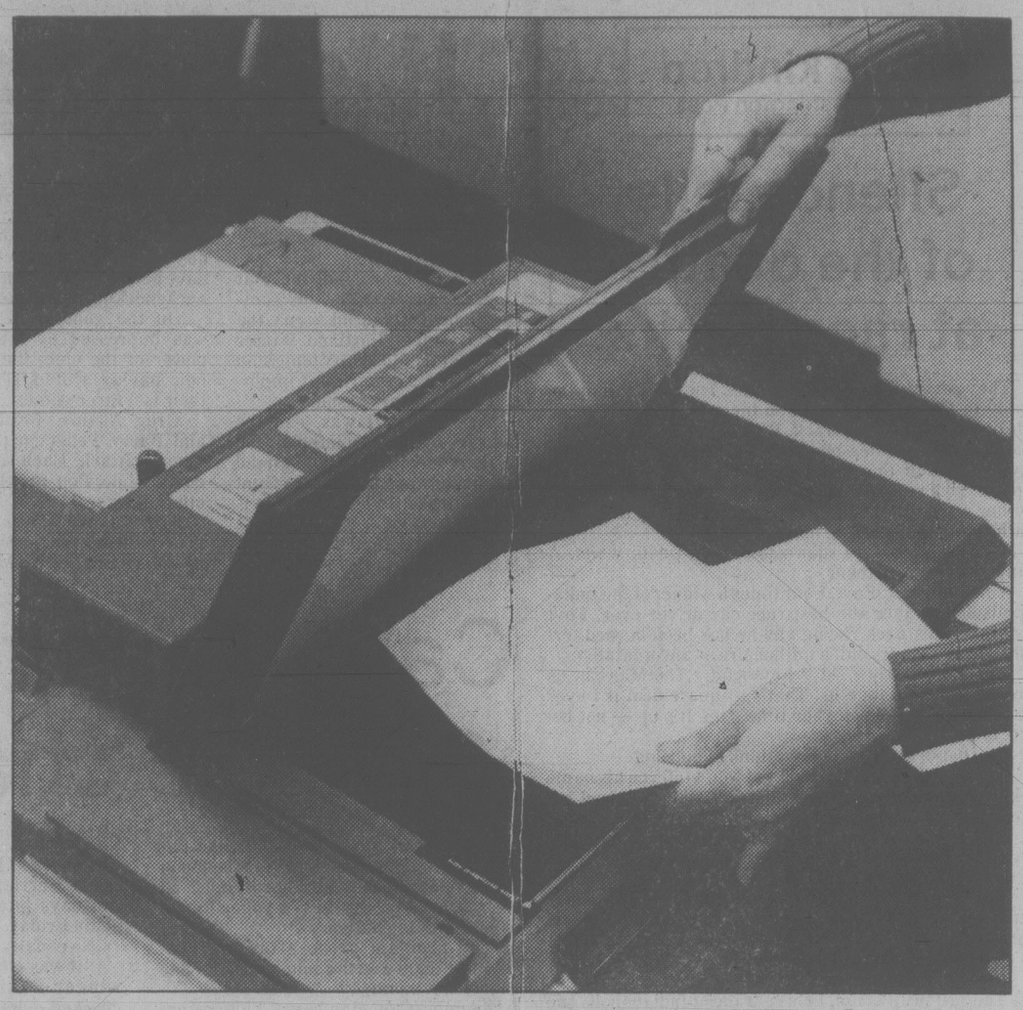

The composers argue there has been such a cost-of-living increase the payment is ridiculous.

Keyes said the issues to be tackled are highly complex. They include a determination of one of the thorniest problem the committee will have to grapple with — fair dealing.

In other words, how much of someone else's material can a person copy or use without infringing on copyright.

The committee is expected to bring down its final recommendations in about six months.

Said Keyes: "It can't come soon enough."

Under new copyright laws licences may be required to operate photo copiers

Boost in funding short of target - Langwood

Funding for handicapped workshops in B.C. will be increased by 37 per cent with an additional $1.3 million being spent this year, Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy announced today.

But Dr. George Stocker, chairman of the board of the Capital Region Association for the Mentally Handicapped, said this solution isn't completely satisfactory and Langwood Workshop may still have to be closed.

McCarthy said the formula on which the 75 centres for the handicapped in the province are funded will remain the same, but the amount paid to the centres on a per-hour basis will be increased to $1 from 73 cents, effective April 1.

The ministry expects to spend $3.9 million this year, up from last year's $2.6 million.

Stocker said the formula should be changed so that severely handicapped persons receive more aid than those who are less handicapped and who can earn some income from their work.

Stocker said CRAMH intends to take some of the increase destined for Sentinel Workshop, which it also operates, and divert it to Langwood to make up its deficit.

"We were encouraged by someone in the presence of the minister to do juggle the books this way but we really don't think it's the answer. Of course, then we're faced with the terrible moral dilemma of taking handicapped people's labor and appropriating funds to help their less fortunate brothers."

Stocker said the ministry has a responsiblity to ensure that the mentally handicapped receive a basic level of education even if they are not capable of producing an income and that the ministry's funding formula reflect that.

McCarthy indicated that the ministry's policy is to encourage the handicapped to develop social and work related skills that lead to greater personal independence.

Stocker noted the handicapped at Langwood are often learning such basic things as telling time and counting money.

The association's board met Tuesday night, he said, and based on an indication of what the minister's announcement would be, agreed to keep Langwood open until June 30.

"The minister has promised us that serious consideration is being given to the question of funding and we think the three-month extension will give her time to do that," said Stocker.

What a hang-up!

A would-be thief got hung-up — literally — while trying to break into an apartment block at 1037 Richardson early today.

The city police report said it best:

"On arrival we found, protruding from a small window, two feet to which was attached a person trapped in that position and hanging inside the premises."

Ronald George McWilliams, 30, appeared in court today charged with attempted breaking and entering, possession of house-breaking tools and breaking and entering.

The latter charge stems from an incident at Helm's Inn, 668 Superior, earlier in the morning when the manageress found a man rifling a cash drawer in the office.

The man fled with about $100.

McWilliams is also charged with breaking into a dry cleaning store in the city Saturday.

He was released on bail when he appeared in court Monday.

Divers hunt knife off Sidney wharf

Saanich police divers were searching off Sidney wharf this morning for the weapon believed used in the slaying Monday of a 31-year-old Saanich woman.

Insp. Robin Stewart said divers are looking for a pearl-handled knife believed thrown into the water after the killing of Marion MacKay in her home at 5420 Old West Saanich Road.

Charged with first degree murder is Barry Dennis McFadden, a 29-year-old self-employed plumber.

Police found MacKay's body, bound in an orange plastic bag, in a boat parked in the driveway of McFadden's home at 10327 Bowerbank in Sidney.

McFadden appeared in provincial court Tuesday afternoon charged with first degree murder and was remanded in custody one week for bail application and date for preliminary hearing.

Stewart said MacKay was stabbed numerous times and officers are waiting for a pathologist's report.

Meanwhile, friends of the dead women are shocked and dismayed.

Her co-workers at the Worker's Compensation Board, where she was a claims reviewer, declined to comment.

"We'd rather not say anything . . . she was a good worker . . . she'll be missed by us all," said one.

A close friend, Larry Jackson, said he was horrified.

"I can't understand it. She was such a beautiful person."

MacKay lived alone in the house which she, her mother, who lives in Vancouver, and a former boyfriend had bought about a year ago.

They had fixed up the place and put it on the market two months ago.

Eight boys face charges in Saanich burglary spree

Saanich police believe they have cracked a major juvenile crime ring operating in the municipality for five months.

Eight boys aged 13 to 16 have been charged in connection with a spate of house break-ins in the Shelbourne-Gordon Head area.

Sgt. Fred Wooster, head of the community services division, indicated further charges may be laid.

He said officers have not determined how many break-ins the group committed but said it was at least 15.

The goods taken included stereo and electronic equipment, jewelry, liquor and money totalling several hundreds dollars.

Police have recovered a stereo set that was hidden in some bushes, and have seized some stolen watches and calculators from homes of the suspects.

Wooster said the break-ins date back to early November. Practically all involved fairly new homes with entry gained by smashing a window or sliding a window out of its aluminium frame.

The majority occurred during the afternoon or early evening while occupants were out.

Police got a break in the case March 13 when they caught a juvenile rifling through belongings in a house in the 1600-block Kisber.

A neighbor saw two youths enter the house and called police.

The second suspect fled before police arrived.

Marijuana-induced cancer 'down the road'

Smoking marijuana may be a greater cancer risk than inhaling tobacco, a public forum was told Tuesday night.

Dr. Malcolm Brigden, part of a four-member panel of medical specialists, said the way marijuana is smoked makes it potentially more dangerous than tobacco.

The marijuana cigarette is smoked right to the end and the smoke inhaled deeply into the lungs and held there as long as possible, Bridgen said.

"We may be seeing a lot of marijuana-induced cancer further down the road."

Bridgen is a cancer specialist at Royal Jubilee and Victoria General hospitals.

Joining him on the panel were Dr. Peter Coy, director of the Victoria Cancer Clinic; Dr. Edwin Henry, occupational health physician, B.C. ministry of health; and Dr. Bruce Dunn, research associate in the department of medical genetics at the University of B.C.

The forum at the Newcombe Auditorium, attended by 330 people, was sponsored by the Times and the Victoria branch of the Canadian Cancer Society.

Bridgen said more than 90 per cent of all lung cancers are directly attributable to smoking.

"It is the cancer people give to themselves," he said.

From 700 to 800 people in B.C. die every year from lung cancer, he said, adding that these are deaths that are completely self-induced.

Unfortunately since the rise of the women's liberation movement, more and more women are smoking and this is likely going to be reflected sooner or later in cancer statistics, he said. The same holds true for the increasing number of young people who smoke.

In answer to a question, he said the cancer risk to a non-smoker from other people's cigarette smoke is probably not that great. But the risk of heart or some other form of lung disease is quite significant.

What about the danger of smoke from wood-burning stoves?

Dunn said the issue is debatable at this stage but it is known that smoke from incomplete combustion is damaging to the lungs, having roughly the same effect as cigarette smoke.

Another concern with more and more people returning to wood burning is the creosote which is deposited in the chimney, Dunn said.

The creosote is potentially hazardous, he said, and he cautioned that anyone who cleans chimneys should wear gloves and avoid the soot as much as possible.

Coy said, in answer to another question, that it was felt in the past that few if any cancers were hereditary.

Now, however, the belief is there may be a predisposition toward certain cancers that can be traced to parents or grandparents. This is particularly true with breast cancer.

In his speech, Coy dealt with the cancer risk from x-ray radiation, comparing it with the risk we face every day from natural sources of radiation in the atmosphere.

Using a technical measuring method, Dunn showed that although the exposure to radiation was greater from medical diagnosis than from other man-made sources, such as consumer products, nuclear power plants or coal-fired power plants, it was not nearly as great as that from natural radiation sources.

There are also ways of reducing the risk from radiation such as the use of protective shields and proper focusing of the treatment, Dunn said.

His conclusion was: "This is a procedure whose risks are much smaller than the gains that are achieved."

Dunn dealt with two myths about cancer. One that everything causes cancer so why worry about it and the other that the doses given test animals are so high they bear no relevance to normal human consumption.

As for the first myth, Dunn said only a minority of chemicals cause cancer and that is why it is worthwhile to find out which ones they are and warn the public about them.

Dealing with the second myth, Dunn said most studies indicate the risk of cancer is related to the dosage of a chemical. Test animals fed high doses of a chemical get a high frequency of tumors.

Low doses that humans are exposed to may produce fewer tumors but "a cancer rate as low as one in 100,000 means 2,500 cancers a year in North America.

Dunn also said there is a strong link between diet and cancer.

A prudent diet to reduce the chances of colon, breast and prostate cancer would be to cut back on fats and meats and increase the consumption of fresh vegetables and fruits, he said.

Henry focussed on the hazard of asbestos, two-thirds of which is used in construction materials.

He said the substance is used as a filler in rubber and plastic, is contained in filter cloths and paper, insulating materials, tiles, shingles, clapboard as well as in pipes and pipe covering.

However, he said it is only hazardous when dry and the fibres are broken up and floating in the air.

"A brief exposure for a short period of time can cause a malignant tumor," Henry said.

He said in time, it will be possible to determine which people are more or less prone to certain cancers and workers will be selected for certain jobs who have less chance of contacting the disease.

Copycats, put your fee in the kitty

By DEREK SIDENIUS

Before long Canadians may have to get a licence to operate a photocopying machine and pay royalties to authors every time they borrow a book from the library.

Those are two of a number of recommendations being considered by members of a special committee of the federal consumer and corporate affairs department charged with updating Canada's copyright laws.

Frank Keyes, an Ottawa lawyer and special adviser to the government on copyright matters, said in an interview the revisions are bound to have a far-reaching impact on the ways copy-mad Canadians copy or use the works of others.

Keyes said under existing laws everyone is supposed to have exclusive rights to the things they produce.

It makes no difference if the creation is a book, play, painting, musical score, photograph, film, sound recording, or even a letter home to mother or a child's stickman drawing.

The creation belongs solely to the creator — or if he is employed, then his employer — and technically, no one can use or copy the material without permission or payment of fees.

Needless to say, Keyes lamented, the law is broken countless times daily.

And the people who make their living from their artistic endeavors are angry.

They want a fairer deal and Keyes said he can't blame them.

He said the problem is that while the law already has broad protections, it is unchanged since 1924 and fails to take into account technological developments since.

The law says nothing about sound films, long-playing records, video-tapes, photocopying machines, computer banks or satellite communications.

And because it doesn't, there is confusion and dissension about how far copyrights extend.

Keyes said authors and publishers have been pressing the government for action in the one area where they feel there is the greatest amount of infringement — photocopying.

They would like to form a collective to licence owners of photocopying machines.

The ramifactions would be extensive, especially in the school system, Keyes said, but the licences would give authors at least some compensation for their material that is copied.

Keyes said there is pressure for new rights to be incorporated in the copyright laws.

For example, authors want a public lending right whereby they'd receive payment every time one of their books is borrowed from a library.

Such a system already exists in 10 countries including Australia, Sweden, New Zealand and Germany.

Performers also want protection from someone copying their act. At present there is none.

Artists are seeking a droit de suite or following right which would entitle them to a share of the profits if a work they sold subsequently increases in value. Such is the case in Germany, Belgium and France.

Film producers are looking for copyright protection to prevent videotaping of films unless a royalty is paid first.

There is also a move to have cablevision companies start paying royalties for the films and programs they air.

Composers are asking for an increase in the royalties that they are entitled to by copyright licence.

The licence says composers are to receive two cents a side per record. But the fee was set in 1924 when there were only 78s. When long-plays came along the licence was interpreted to mean two cents for each tune.

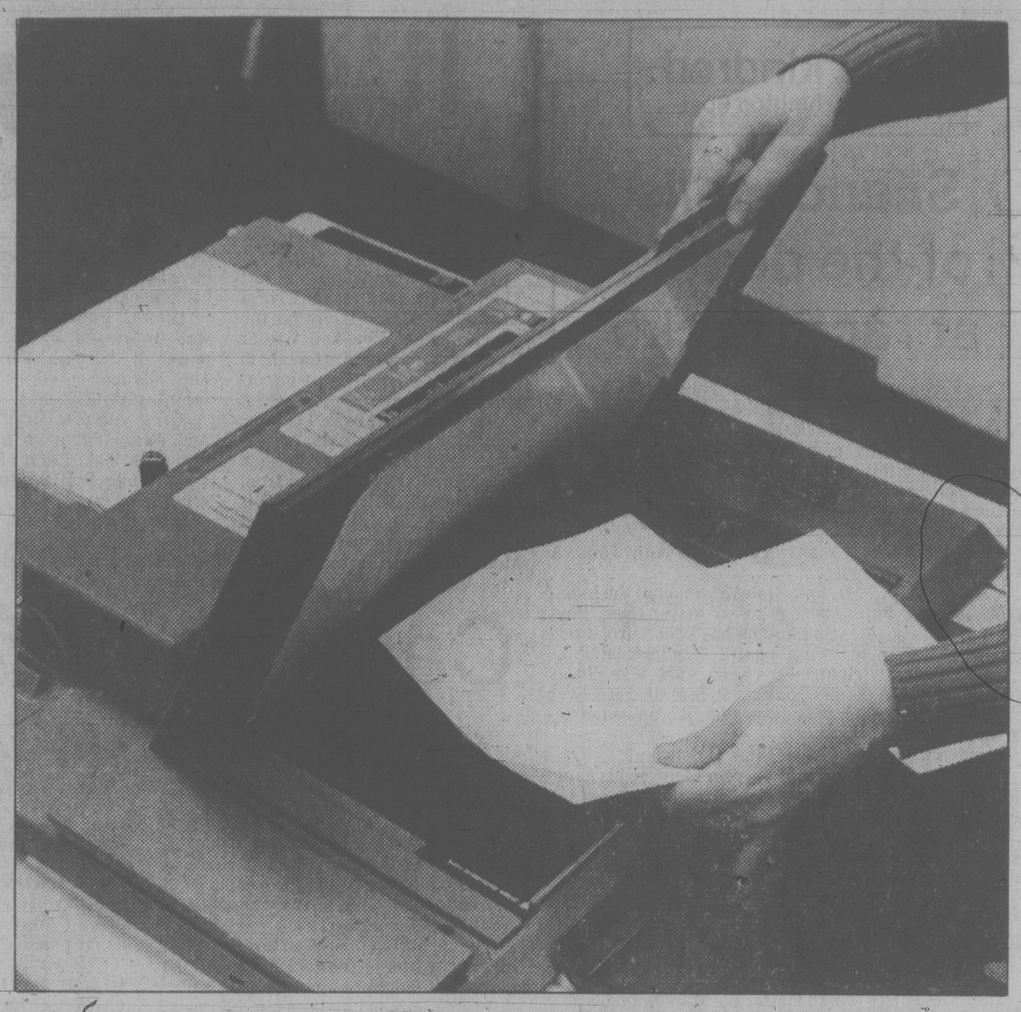

The composers argue there has been such a cost-of-living increase the payment is ridiculous.

Keyes said the issues to be tackled are highly complex. They include a determination of one of the thorniest problem the committee will have to grapple with — fair dealing.

In other words, how much of someone else's material can a person copy or use without infringing on copyright.

The committee is expected to bring down its final recommendations in about six months.

Said Keyes: "It can't come soon enough."

Under new copyright laws licences may be required to operate photo copiers

Boost in funding short of target - Langwood

Funding for handicapped workshops in B.C. will be increased by 37 per cent with an additional $1.3 million being spent this year, Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy announced today.

But Dr. George Stocker, chairman of the board of the Capital Region Association for the Mentally Handicapped, said this solution isn't completely satisfactory and Langwood Workshop may still have to be closed.

McCarthy said the formula on which the 75 centres for the handicapped in the province are funded will remain the same but the amount paid to the centres on a per-hour basis will be increased to $1 from 73 cents, effective April 1.

The ministry expects to spend $3.9 million this year, up from last year's $2.6 million.

Stocker said the formula should be changed so that severely handicapped persons receive more aid than those who are less handicapped and who can earn some income from their work.

Stocker said CRAMH intends to take some of the increase destined for Sentinel Workshop, which it also operates, and divert it to Langwood to make up its deficit.

"We were encouraged by someone in the presence of the minister to juggle the books this way but we really don't think it's the answer. Of course, then we're faced with the terrible moral dilemma of taking handicapped people's labor and appropriating funds to help their less fortunate brothers."

Stocker said the ministry has a responsiblity to ensure that the mentally handicapped receive a basic level of education even if they are not capable of producing an income and that the ministry's funding formula reflect that.

McCarthy indicated that the ministry's policy is to encourage the handicapped to develop social and work related skills that lead to greater personal independence.

Stocker noted the handicapped at Langwood are often learning such basic things as telling time and counting money.

The association's board met Tuesday night, he said, and based on an indication of what the minister's announcement would be, agreed to keep Langwood open until June 30.

"The minister has promised us that serious consideration is being given to the question of funding and we think the three-month extension will give her time to do that," said Stocker.

What a hang-up!

A would-be thief got hung-up — literally — while trying to break into an apartment block at 1037 Richardson early today.

The city police report said it best:

"On arrival we found, protruding from a small window, two feet to which was attached a person trapped in that position and hanging inside the premises."

Ronald George McWilliams, 30, appeared in court today charged with attempted breaking and entering, possession of house-breaking tools and breaking and entering.

The latter charge stems from an incident at Helm's Inn, 668 Superior, earlier in the morning when the manageress found a man rifling a cash drawer in the office.

The man fled with about $100.

McWilliams is also charged with breaking into a dry cleaning store in the city Saturday.

He was released on bail when he appeared in court Monday.

Divers hunt knife off Sidney wharf

Saanich police divers were searching off Sidney wharf this morning for the weapon believed used in the slaying Monday of a 31-year-old Saanich woman.

Insp. Robin Stewart said divers are looking for a pearl-handled knife believed thrown into the water after the killing of Marion MacKay in her home at 5420 Old West Saanich Road.

Charged with first degree murder is Barry Dennis McFadden, a 29-year-old self-employed plumber.

Police found MacKay's body, bound in an orange plastic bag, in a boat parked in the driveway of McFadden's home at 10327 Bowerbank in Sidney.

McFadden appeared in provincial court Tuesday afternoon charged with first degree murder and was remanded in custody one week for bail application and date for preliminary hearing.

Stewart said MacKay was stabbed numerous times and officers are waiting for a pathologist's report.

Meanwhile, friends of the dead women are shocked and dismayed.

Her co-workers at the Worker's Compensation Board, where she was a claims reviewer, declined to comment.

"We'd rather not say anything . . . she was a good worker . . . she'll be missed by us all," said one.

A close friend, Larry Jackson, said he was horrified.

"I can't understand it. She was such a beautiful person."

MacKay lived alone in the house which she, her mother, who lives in Vancouver, and a former boyfriend had bought about a year ago.

They had fixed up the place and put it on the market two months ago.

Eight boys face charges in Saanich burglary spree

Saanich police believe they have cracked a major juvenile crime ring operating in the municipality for five months.

Eight boys aged 13 to 16 have been charged in connection with a spate of house break-ins in the Shelbourne-Gordon Head area.

Sgt. Fred Wooster, head of the community services division, indicated further charges may be laid.

He said officers have not determined how many break-ins the group committed but said it was at least 15.

The goods taken included stereo and electronic equipment, jewelry, liquor and money totalling several hundreds dollars.

Police have recovered a stereo set that was hidden in some bushes, and have seized some stolen watches and calculators from homes of the suspects.

Wooster said the break-ins date back to early November. Practically all involved fairly new homes with entry gained by smashing a window or sliding a window out of its aluminum frame.

The majority occurred during the afternoon or early evening while occupants were out.

Police got a break in the case March 13 when they caught a juvenile rifling through belongings in a house in the 1600 block Kisber.

A neighbor saw two youths enter the house and called police.

The second suspect fled before police arrived.

Marijuana-induced cancer 'down the road'

Smoking marijuana may be a greater cancer risk than inhaling tobacco, a public forum was told Tuesday night.

Dr. Malcolm Brigden, part of a four-member panel of medical specialists, said the way marijuana is smoked makes it potentially more dangerous than tobacco.

The marijuana cigarette is smoked right to the end and the smoke inhaled deeply into the lungs and held there as long as possible, Bridgen said.

"We may be seeing a lot of marijuana-induced cancer further down the road."

Brigden is a cancer specialist at Royal Jubilee and Victoria General hospitals.

Joining him on the panel were Dr. Peter Coy, director of the Victoria Cancer Clinic; Dr. Edwin Henry, occupational health physician, B.C. ministry of health; and Dr. Bruce Dunn, research associate in the department of medical genetics at the University of B.C.

The forum at the Newcombe Auditorium, attended by 330 people, was sponsored by the Times and the Victoria branch of the Canadian Cancer Society.

Brigden said more than 90 per cent of all lung cancers are directly attributable to smoking.

"It is the cancer people give to themselves," he said.

From 700 to 800 people in B.C. die every year from lung cancer, he said, adding that these are deaths that are completely self-induced.

Unfortunately since the rise of the women's liberation movement, more and more women are smoking and this is likely going to be reflected sooner or later in cancer statistics, he said. The same holds true for the increasing number of young people who smoke.

In answer to a question, he said the cancer risk to a non-smoker from other people's cigarette smoke is probably not that great. But the risk of heart or some other form of lung disease is quite significant.

What about the danger of smoke from wood-burning stoves?

Dunn said the issue is debatable at this stage but it is known that smoke from incomplete combustion is damaging to the lungs, having roughly the same effect as cigarette smoke.

Another concern with more and more people returning to wood burning is the creosote which is deposited in the chimney, Dunn said.

The creosote is potentially hazardous, he said, and he cautioned that anyone who cleans chimneys should wear gloves and avoid the soot as much as possible.

Coy said, in answer to another question, that it was felt in the past that few if any cancers were hereditary.

Now, however, the belief is there may be a predisposition toward certain cancers that can be traced to parents or grandparents. This is particularly true with breast cancer.

In his speech, Coy dealt with the cancer risk from x-ray radiation, comparing it with the risk we face every day from natural sources of radiation in the atmosphere.

Using a technical measuring method, Coy showed that although the exposure to radiation was greater from medical diagnosis than from other man-made sources, such as consumer products, nuclear power plants or coal-fired power plants, it was not nearly as great as that from natural radiation sources.

There are also ways of reducing the risk from radiation such as the use of protective shields and proper focusing of the treatment, Coy said.

His conclusion was: "This is a procedure whose risks are much smaller than the gains that are achieved."

Dunn dealt with two myths about cancer. One that everything causes cancer so why worry about it and the other that the doses given test animals are so high they bear no relevance to normal human consumption.

As for the first myth, Dunn said only a minority of chemicals cause cancer and that is why it is worthwhile to find out which ones they are and warn the public about them.

Dealing with the second myth, Dunn said most studies indicate the risk of cancer is related to the dosage of a chemical. Test animals fed high doses of a chemical get a high frequency of tumors.

Low doses that humans are exposed to may produce fewer tumors but "a cancer rate as low as one in 100,000 means 2,500 cancers a year in North America.

Dunn also said there is a strong link between diet and cancer.

A prudent diet to reduce the chances of colon, breast and prostate cancer would be to cut back on fats and meats and increase the consumption of fresh vegetables and fruits, he said.

Henry focussed on the hazard of asbestos, two-thirds of which is used in construction materials.

He said the substance is used as a filler in rubber and plastic, is contained in filter cloths and paper, insulating materials, tiles, shingles, clapboard as well as in pipes and pipe covering.

However, he said it is only hazardous when dry and the fibres are broken up and floating in the air.

"A brief exposure for a short period of time can cause a malignant tumor," Henry said.

He said in time, it will be possible to determine which people are more prone to certain cancers and workers will be selected for certain jobs who have less chance of contacting the disease.
